It is Mrs. Sheridan's wish that her husband should be buried with military honors and that at the same time there should be no display beyond what pertains to a strictly military funeral in proper respect to his rank. Will you kindly authorize such a funeral and place matters under charge of Gen. Schofield. The funeral will be in Washington, but when and where I can not yet say. Perhaps it would be well for Gen. Schofield to come here.

It has been decided that Gen. Sheridan's burial shall be in the Arlington National cemetery and Saturday has been finally settled on as the day. [illegible] will be no funeral services. No guard.

Father McKinn, of St. Matthews church, saw Cardinal Gibbons at Baltimore yesterday, and was informed by the cardinal that he would personally officiate at the obsequies of Gen. Sheridan on Saturday next. The cardinal was consulted by the Sheridans in the church, consecrate a plot of ground at Arlington and he was present at the interment. Cardinal Gibbons was on the point of visiting the west, but on learning of Gen. Sheridan's death, changed his plans.

The gentlemen selected by the general's family to act as pall-bearers are as follows: Gen. W. T. Sherman; Marshall Field, of Chicago; Gen. Hawley, of the United States senate; Secretary Lamar; Vice President Frank Thompson, of the Pennsylvania railroad; Gen. Wesley Merritt, U. S. A.; the surviving officer of the Grand Army order Reynolds in the District of Columbia; Secretary Whitney; Gen. McCleery; Gen. Joseph Fullerton, of St. Louis; Secretary Endicott and George W. Childs.

The president sent the following telegram to Mrs. Sheridan.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 6. MRS. SHERIDAN, NONQUITT, MASS., Via New Bedford:—While the nation mourns its loss and shares your sorrow let me express to you my personal grief and most sincere condolence.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

At 1 o'clock the following communication was sent to the capitol:

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: It becomes my painful duty to announce to the congress and to the people of the United States the death of Philip H. Sheridan, general of the army, which occurred at a late hour last night at his summer home in the state of Massachusetts. The death of this valiant soldier and patriotic son of the republic, though his long illness has been regarded with anxiety, has nevertheless shocked the country and caused universal grief. [illegible] caught the true meaning and purpose of his soldierly devotion and heroic temper. His intrepid courage, his steadfast patriotism and the generosity of his nature inspired with peculiar warmth the admiration of all the people. Above his grave affection for the man and pride in his achievements will struggle for mastery, and too much honor can not be accorded to one who was so richly endowed with the qualities which make his death a national loss.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

GEN. SHERIDAN'S ILLNESS.

Several Times He Was Very Near Death's Door.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 6.—The illness which has resulted in Gen. Sheridan's death commenced on the 12th of May last, immediately after his return to Washington from a tour of inspection out west. He complained of feeling unwell and worn out, but went down to the office each day for about a week. He was then forced to remain in doors, and on May 22 he had a severe attack of heart failure, which greatly alarmed his family and physicians. On account of the effect it was feared the news would have on the general's mother, who was aged and in ill-health, an endeavor was made to keep the more alarming phases of his illness from the public, and it was not until the end of that week that the physicians admitted the true character of the disease. On Friday of the week ending May 26 he had several attacks of heart failure and these increased in violence with each succeeding attack. Several times during his illness it seemed as if his life had become extinct, but by the adoption of radical measures the action of the heart was stimulated and he was brought round again. His heart at one time ceased to beat for a few seconds, but the extraordinary watchfulness and care of the attending physicians brought him back to consciousness again. New complications set in and hope was abandoned several times only to be renewed by the great vitality and determination shown by the stricken soldier. With the approach of warm weather it was decided by the physicians that the patient must be removed, as he would be utterly unable in his weakened state to withstand a period of prolonged heat. Accordingly on Saturday, June 30, he was, after several delays placed on board the United States steamer Swatara and taken to Nonquitt, Mass., which place he reached after several stops by recurrences of the heart trouble.

AN INTERIOR VIEW IN GEN. SHERIDAN'S WASHINGTON HOME.

The general had made his will and all preparations for death and was ready to face it, though resolutely determined that life should not be given up without a severe struggle. He leaves a wife, the daughter of Gen. Rucker, and four small children—three girls and one boy.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 12.

Text of the Lesson, Lev. xvi, 1-16—Commit Verse 16—Golden Text, Heb. ix, 28

Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

V. 1. "The Lord spake." This sentence should always command our most reverent attention, we want to bow our heads and hearts in loving submission and say "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

"The death of the two sons of Aaron." This was because of disobedience (x, 1); they willfully did what God had commanded them not to do (Ex. xxx, 9), and fire from the Lord devoured them.

"They offered before the Lord." All our service as Christians is before the Lord and ought to be unto Him in the power of the Spirit; all else is as strange fire.

V. 2. "Come not at all times within the vail," for the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest; but now we have boldness to enter at all times into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, (Heb. ix, 8; x, 19.)

"The cloud upon the mercy seat." What a glorious new and living way it is that not only gives us access to, but permits to abide in Him who is our Ark and Mercy Seat and cloud and Holy of Holies, in whom we have redemption not for a year, but eternal redemption. (Heb. ix, 12.)

V. 3. "Thus shall Aaron come into the holy." We will best understand this lesson by looking at it under the following headings. 1. The person of Aaron. 2. The sacrifices for the people. 4. His entrance to the holiest. 5. The disposal of the blood. 6. The disposal of the sin offering. 7. The disposal of the scapegoat. 8. The burnt offering. 9. The grand result.

1. The person of Aaron.—Verse 4 says that he was to wash his flesh in water and put on holy linen garments—breeches, coat, girdle and miter, this signifies that he put off the beautiful garments ordinarily worn by him, and described in Ex. xxviii, thus he stands before us typifying the Lord Jesus, who laid aside all His glory and beauty and as the holy spotless one became our substitute. The garments of glory and beauty (Ex. xxviii), 2) speak to us of the present work of our High Priest making continual intercession for us. Rev. xix, 8, gives us the significance of linen, and Ezek. xliv, 17, 18, tells why it was worn. The word sweat is only found in two other places in Scripture—Gen. iii, 19, Luke xxii, 44—and the lesson is on the surface for opened eyes.

2. The sacrifices for himself and his house.—These are found in verses 3, 6, 11, 24, and included both a sin offering and a burnt offering, which were explained in the last lesson. Being a sinful man, he had to offer sacrifice for himself as well as for the sins of the people. Heb. ix, 7, but our High Priest is holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners.

3. The sacrifices for the people.—These are found in verses 5, 7, 10, and also included a sin offering and burnt offering. The burnt offering in each case was a ram, but the sin offering was, for Aaron, a bullock, and for the people, two goats, the reason may be found in my comments upon the last lesson.

4. The entrance to the Holiest.—This is described in verses 12-17. We must understand the arrangement of the tabernacle, and remember that into this room went the high priest alone, and only once every year. (Heb. ix, 7.) He was to take the censer of burning coals from off the golden altar before the vail and carry it, within the vail, putting on the fire handfuls of sweet incense beaten small, that a cloud of incense might cover the mercy seat, that he die not. The precious truth of the merits of Christ as a sweet incense before God on our behalf will fill our souls if we only receive it. One not acquainted with this day's services might think from reading (Heb. ix, 3, 4) that the golden censer belonged within the vail, but that chapter has special reference to this one day, and the usual place of the golden censer is found in Ex. xl, 4, 5, xxx, 1, 10.

5. The disposal of the blood.—This was the all important part of the day's work. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. xvii, 11.) Verses 14-16, 18, 19 tell us what was done with the blood; on the mercy seat and seven times before the mercy seat, on the horns of the altar and seven times on the altar.

6. The disposal of the sin offerings. Verses 25, 27, 28. The fat burned upon the altar, for even in Christ as our sin offering, bearing our sins there was an excellence that only God could appreciate; the bodies burned without the camp. "Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto Him, without the camp, bearing His reproach. For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." (Heb. xiii, 11-14.)

7. The disposal of the scapegoat. (Vs. 20-22, 26.) Two goats were taken for the people's sin offering. One was slain and the blood sprinkled, as we have learned, on the head of the other, as these verses tell us. The priest laid both his hands and confessed all the iniquities, transgressions and sins of all the people, putting them on the head of the goat, and he was then led away into the wilderness, bearing them all into a land not inhabited.

8. The burnt offerings. (Vs. 23, 24.) The whole sin question having been now attended to Aaron again washes himself, having put off the white linen garments and put on his other garments, and comes forth to offer the burnt offerings for himself and for the people, and make an atonement.

9. The grand result. "Clean from all your sins before the Lord" all iniquity, transgression and sin borne to a land of separation. (Vs. 21, 22, 29, 30.) What a day it was! A day of affliction of soul, but no work might be done in it. Their part was penitence. The priests' work was to make atonement, and in that he was perfectly alone. (V. 17.) They did not help him in any way. Clean from all sin was God's gift to them through the work of another and by the sacrifice of a substitute. How glad they must have been, what peace and rest—all sins forgiven! But it was only for a year. The priest might say: "Next year I must go and do this again." One of the people might scarcely have been cleansed till he must come again to the priest with an offering for some trespass committed. But our "sacrifice has been offered once for all." "Clean every whit." He says to all who accept Him, and that precious blood, once shed, would continually cleanse from all sin if we would but walk in the light. "Sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. For by one offering He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified" (Heb. x, 10, 14). True penitence is our part, and even that the spirit works in us; full salvation has He wrought out for us, and freely gives to "whoever will." Tell it out, gather in the lost, hasten the completion of His body, that He may return for Israel's restoration and the salvation of the world.

Inherited Diseases.

No fact of nature is more pregnant with awful meaning than the fact of the inheritance of disease.

Modern science, which has illuminated so many dark corners of nature, has added a new vigor to the famous words of the Scriptures, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Fifty per cent of cases of consumption, cancer and scrofula, run in families through inheritance. Insanity is hereditary in a marked degree, but, fortunately, like many other hereditary diseases, tends to wear itself out, the stock becoming extinct. A distinguished scientist truly says: "No organ or texture of the body is exempt from the chance of being the subject of hereditary disease." Probably more chronic diseases, which permanently modify the structure and functions of the body, are more or less liable to be inherited. The important and far-reaching practical deductions from such facts are obvious to reflecting minds, and the best means for preventing or curing these diseases is a subject of intense interest to all. Fortunately nature has provided a remedy, which experience has attested as infallible, and the remedy is the world-famous Swift's Specific, a pure vegetable compound—nature's antidote for all blood poisons. To the afflicted it is a blessing of inestimable value. An interesting treatise on "Blood and Skin Diseases" will be mailed free by addressing Yesterday morning Hoge brought suit for libel against The News for himself and wife, putting the damages of each at $25,000. They will also sue Detective Pinneo, of the Burlington & Missouri railroad, for the same amounts on the same charge.

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many diseases that originate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. The Restorative Nervine a brain and nerve food, sold by Baker & Hall cures weakness, want of appetite, exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and dissipation. It takes the place of stimulates, opiates, chloral, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. Asa B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured." Papillon extract of flax Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00

The use of ripe grapes for dinner is of incalculable benefit to the human system, and the Pure Grape Juice, properly preserved, is invaluable for weakly persons and invalids. To use the Unfermented Grape Juice is just like eating the ripe sweet grape.

FRANCE MEDICAL INSTITUTE, COLUMBUS, O.

AMONG THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS

MR. EDITOR—Below I give a short account of our very enjoyable trip to the Great West, hoping it will be of interest to some of your readers.

Leaving Ridgeway early in June I drove my team through to Whitewater, Wis., my wife having gone on by railroad. After a visit with friends in Whitewater and vicinity, my son procured leave of absence and he and wife and myself and wife, left Whitewater early on the morning of July 9th. After spending the afternoon in Lincoln Park, Chicago, we took the night train for Kansas City, where we arrived late the next day and remained over night, and taking the morning train west on the A. T. & S. F. Ry. had a pleasant daylight ride via. Topeka, Newton, Hutchinson and the most beautiful and productive portion of Kansas, where the growing crops gave evidence of a fertility of soil no where excelled. During the next night very perceptable changes in climate and soil took place. When we arose we found ourselves well along toward the old city of Pueblo, Colo., on the parched and naked plains where were thousands of poor and starving cattle. From the car window one could see from one to a score of dead and dying on the side or at the bottom of almost every bank in the dry river beds up which the poor beasts were unable to climb so weakened were they by starvation. We are informed that nearly the whole of eastern Colo has suffered greatly from drouth during the present season.

Long before reaching Pueblo, snowy Pike's Peak was pointed out to us and we kept him closely in view all along the eastern slope until we made our first stop at Denver, where the buildings being all of modern architectural design have a beautiful appearance when contrasted with the time worn structures of our older cities. It now has over 100,000 inhabitants and surely the place presents a picture of rare business activity.

After a two days stay in Denver we turned our backs and journeys toward the ever vast Rockies and halted at Empire, where we added to our party three gentlemen of the ponderous avoirdupois in a hack wagon and set out for the lake which they told us was only forty miles distant, but which appears only a short drive. We stopped for lunch at the little village of LaPorte which is composed of a store, the post office and a few dwellings. One can hardly realize that but a few years ago this bright and lively village was vying with the now famous city of Denver, for the location of the state capital, but such is the case.

As we gradually ascend from range to range over the hills and across beautiful grassy glades thousands and thousands of acres in extent, where are grazing the largest and best herds of cattle and sheep yet seen, the eye is greatly deceived both in the matter of elevation and distance. While apparently climbing one of these vast mountains of rock and earth, it appears that we are coming down hill, but nearly all the while ourselves, so beautiful mountain streams go leaping by in an opposite direction on its way out to the plains, where it is used by the farmers for irrigating their land, and objects, to which it appears to be but a short walk, prove to be miles away. Verily this is "The country of magnificent distances."

During our first Sunday out we were encamped on Pingrey's Hill, the elevation of which we did not know, but from whose summit we could see the beautiful valley of the Cache La Poudre in front and at our right look down upon the snowy range and Cameron Pass.

To vary the monotony of camp on Pingrey's Hill, we visited Manhatton, a neighboring gold mining camp where we were very kindly entertained and instructed how the mines were operated and how the precious metal was "panned out," also the stamp mill and the smelter. Manhatton has a very promising future, as rich veins of gold and silver bearing ore, have there been discovered and machinery is rapidly being placed for bringing the gold out from its natural state.

At the foot of Pingrey's Hill we find a big toll gate and a little hotel. It costs two dollars to get a team past the gate no matter if for nothing more than to turn round and with a three mile hill in the rear one is not very apt to wish to turn back at once. We did not sound the tale hotel called "The Rustic," but I presume the proprietor would have had the audacity of the mosquito in presenting his bill, nor did we turn back, no, having set out for "Big Snowy" we gently dropped into the receptacle two large sized iron dollars and passed on into the beautiful valley of the Cache La Poudre. This valley is variable in width. At times the road passes through splendid glades, thousands of acres in extent and pastured by numerous herds of cattle and horses all in good condition, again through a canyon whose walls on either side tower up nearly perpendicularly fully a thousand feet. In one of these canyons we find the falls of the Poudre. Though the fall is not from a great elevation it is a most magnificent scene. There are three distinct falls. Immediately above the lowest and largest fall the whole body of water passes between rocks about eight feet apart and drops into a large pool below on [illegible] is to be seen, but the cloud of spray usually accompanying the fall of such bodies of water is here most picturesque arising in such amount as to keep the rock walled canyon dropping wet to considerable height.

We made permanent camp about two miles above the falls and—

I at once set out with line and fly,
My unknown skill upon the mountain trout to try
And did I get them? Great an hour passed away
I had a string of fourteen and felt gay.

Thinking I had proven myself a skillful angler I hurried back to camp only to meet disappointment, for our guide told me that "almost any novice at the business could do as well as that," which is true. Trout fishing has lost its charms for me. This throw and haul with nearly every cast a little wiggler weighing from one half to one and one half pounds is too too.—for sport, give me a good bass or pickerel on a troll line.

Our camp was situated on one of those beautiful little glades about three miles from Chamber's Lake, which is the second highest body of fresh water on the continent being 9100 feet above sea level and near [illegible] deposits have been discovered which rival even those which have made Leadville world famous.

With a good frost every night, and sunshine with an occasional shower during the day where the air is too light and chilly for the gay and festive fly and mosquito, with elk, deer and bear in abundance, we lived upon such delicacies as trout, bearsteak, venison, mountain grouse etc.

Our party consisted of three ladies and four gentlemen, a picked seven, whose ages were respectively 27, 30, 36, 51, 67, 71 and 72. All stood the journey well and enjoyed the trip hugely.

If you desire to enjoy mountain scenery do not go where the six dollar a day hotel is located, where the ingenuity of man has been exerted and a great amount of money expended to improve upon nature, where the cyclopean dude and the hotel swell with their pattered in the middle flourish, but go in your old style coach, take your own cook, go where nature is unadulterated by the artifices of man, there you can find real enjoyment in viewing the marvelous works of our Infinite Creator.

We will soon start for home expecting to visit on the way, Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou and the Garden of the Gods. While so near we wish to look upon that famous Garden as we may never again be allowed the privilege either here or hereafter.

Yours Truly,
J. LOWE.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Sen. Cullom has offered a preamble and resolution in regard to the monopoly which the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. has, by controlling all the approaches to the bridge over the St Mary's River, on the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to inquire into these matters and report to Congress if any additional legislation is necessary to protect our interests.

The House committee on agriculture, which recently decided to postpone the further consideration of the various bills relating to compounded lard until next December, has reconsidered its action, and decided to report to the House the Lee bill to prevent the sale, manufacture or transportation of adulterated articles of food, drink, and drugs; also a substitute for the Butterworth bill defining lard and imposing a tax upon compound lard and regulating its sale, importation and exportation.

The rules of the Senate have been amended so as to allow the privilege of the floor to ex-speakers of the House of Representatives.

The republican Senators have had no end of trouble in reaching an agreement on the tariff, but with the aid of a caucus held Wednesday evening, they have finally decided to report, thoroughly discuss, and pass a substitute for the Mills bill. The measure, they say is nearly ready to report. Sugar and the internal revenue will furnish the principal reductions.

The House has passed a bill to create a United States Land Court, for the purpose of judicial investigation and settlement of private land claims in New Mexico and Colorado. Arizona was originally included in the bill, but Delegate Smith, of that Territory, made such a vigorous opposition that he succeeded in having an amendment exempting Arizona adopted.

Curious things come out sometimes in Congressional investigations. There is a committee now engaged in investigating the publication of the War Records. The other day a witness testified that the work of the War Records office was three months ahead of the Government Printing Office in its work, now the foreman of that institution testifies that on the very day that the other testimony was given he received a verbal request from the War Records office, to stop composition until they could catch up. Both testimony cannot possibly have told the truth.

A service pension bill has been introduced by Senator Hiscock. Under its provisions every person who served three months in the army or navy during the civil war is entitled to a pension.

Chairman Geo. O. Jones, of the National committee of the greenback party, is in this city, for the purpose of issuing a call for a national convention of that party. Mr. Jones says the financial question completely overshadows that of the tariff.

It is understood that Senator Ingalls is preparing a speech on the fisheries treaty, that will attack the whole foreign policy of the administration.

A bill has been favorably reported to the Senate, making the fee for examining applicants for pension $2 for each surgeon when made by a board, and $2 when made by a single surgeon. It allows traveling expenses if the surgeon has to go to the applicant's residence.

A SAFE CONCLUSION.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, (after reading the Chicago platform) "Well, the issue is squarely made, and I've about concluded not to move next spring."

The Newspaper Revolution.

From the Rockford (Ill.) Register.]

"The era of cumbrous blanket-sheets seems coming to an end, and newspapers like the New York Sun and THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS are the prominent journalistic successes of the period. The papers that give enough reading matter to fill a good volume in each daily issue are going out of favor with many people who have some other employment for their time than the search through mountains of straw for kernels of news. The sheets that give the news systematically and amply, and without unnecessary padding, are taking the lead in the great cities."

Forty years ago the chief duty of an editor, in view of his limited facilities, was to gather all the news he could and print it. Intelligence was transmitted slowly; many occurrences of interest were never heard of beyond their immediate locality; ocean mails were long in transit, and the overthrow of an European dynasty was not known here until long after the event. Suddenly there came a change. The railroad and the telegraph superseded old methods, and the newspaper was literally flooded with news. The death of a petty ward politician in San Francisco, the result of a Presidential election, the accession of a sovereign, the outbreak of a war, and notice that a shanty had been burden in Texas, all were hurried over the wires into the newspaper offices, and there being no idea of discrimination, all were printed. Thus originated the "blanket sheet." The publisher who could send out the biggest blanket for a nickel was the most enterprising; the biggest paper was the best; it was a period of bigness. But after a time the very excess of the evil brought the remedy, and there began an era of discrimination, during which arose such journals as the New York Sun and THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. That the public appreciated the new departure is best evidenced in the fact that the Sun reached a circulation of 150,000 a day, and THE DAILY NEWS 175,000. The wonderful and constantly growing popularity of the condensed, low-priced papers has so far brought the cumbrous and high-priced blanket-sheets to their senses, that they have now somewhat reformed both as to size and price, but they are still too far removed from the true ideal of American journalism to meet the needs of the great majority.

In the west THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has been the first to appreciate and meet the situation, and it now enjoys the results of its twelve years of pioneer work in a daily circulation averaging over three times that of any of its contemporaries, and considerably more than the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. It is hardly necessary to say that such a circulation could not be attained, much less maintained, except by a paper of high grade of excellence, as well as one sold at a popular price. To win such recognition the cheap paper must be as good a newspaper as the best of its higher-priced competitors. And this THE DAILY NEWS certainly is. It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only paper in Chicago which possesses a franchise which secures to it both the day and night dispatches of the Association. In the general field of news-gathering it represents in the highest degree the progressive enterprise of American journalism: as a news-paper it challenges comparison with any in the land. In its editorial columns THE DAILY NEWS speaks from the standpoint of the independent newspaper, and thereby escapes the temptation of impairing honest and honorable influence by condoning or defending the questionable under the pressure of party allegiance. It is not an organ, neither is it a neutral in questions of principle. It has the courage of its convictions. The organ of no party, sect or interest, it voices the united demand of all those better elements of society in behalf of purity, honesty and decency in all the relations of life. By just so much as it thus commends itself to the regard of the truly "best people" of the community does it voluntarily renounce any community of interest with all others.

So conspicuous a success must have its imitators, and THE DAILY NEWS has the endorsement such imitation always bestows. However as it is the only one-cent paper in Chicago or the West which is a member of the Associated Press—all other Chicago Associated Press papers cost 3 cents—all imitation must continue, so far as news giving value is concerned, to be but imitation. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "the original," "the best."

Sold by all newsdealers at ONE CENT per copy, six cents per week. Mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. Every farmer can now have his daily paper at little more than the cost of the old time weekly. Address

MORGAN DIED HARD.

Physicians Hold His Hands While He Slowly Strangles to Death.

NEW YORK, Aug 4.—The World's special from Columbus, Ohio, says that "Blinky" Morgan made an awful fight for life when he was hanged. The trap was sprung at 1:22. He fell seven feet and the straps came off his arms, and he began trying to pull the rope off his neck. The physicians grabbed his hands and held them until he died of strangulation. It was twenty-four minutes before the heart ceased to beat, and he died a terrible death, drawing his legs up and kicking in a frightful manner. Morgan made a statement to Warden Coffin that night that is looked upon by some as being a confession of his guilt. During his conversation the warden suggested to Morgan that if he had told his whereabouts on the night of the tragedy his life could probably be saved. Morgan said: "It would do no good at this stage of the game, and besides it would do others a great deal of trouble." Afterward Morgan went on to state that it would ruin two women if he told where he was at the time of the McMunn rescue.

An Incendiary Fire Extinguished.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—A fire occurred in a three-story and basement rattle-trap tenement at 125 East Eleventh street. The building adjoins Webster hall and was occupied by J. Schafer, wife and two children and several lodgers. The Schafers left the house at 8 o'clock saying they were going on a water excursion. At 8:35 the fire was discovered, but was promptly extinguished with a loss of only $200. The firemen then discovered that the floors, doors, bed, bedding and closets were saturated with kerosene and benezine besides two "jokers" that did not go off and three packages of gunpowder were found on the floor and in the closets. Detectives are now looking after the Schafers.

The claim is now in the hands of a well known attorney, who stated that he could give no particulars about the matter until next week. It is said that her claim is that she was married to Mr. Kittson when she was 18 years of age. She is said to be at present a resident of Winnipeg.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, AUG. 16.

Will Harrison withdraw? Well, if the Court knows herself, and she thinks she does, Benjamin will stick.

"Working the free trade racket" is becoming stale. It does'nt scare the laboring man this year worth a cent.

No one seriously advocates free trade in this campaign, but a great many people advocate a revision of the tariff and a reduction of war taxes.

The New York World says: "The bustle is on its last legs." Did the young man who wrote that sentence ever study anatomy? If so, where?

Blaine arrived in New York one day too late and so the big play went on with Hamlet left out. The parade was a very creditable funeral procession.

Gen. Harrison's idea that the country should be taxed in order to subsidize steam ship companies is not likely to win him any votes among the Michigan grangers.

The democratic majority at the Alabama state election will probably reach 200,000, the heaviest majority ever given in the state. Free wool and lower taxes don't seem to frighten the Alabama grangers any.

The Republican leaders are beginning to realize that in their anxiety to throw Blaine overboard, and they are now striving to make him the leading figure in the campaign. The Blaine idolatry will be exhibited in all the doubtful states.

Out of two hundred labor papers published in the United states, just one is an out and out supporter of Harrison. About a dozen are neutral, all the rest advocate Cleveland's election. This influence will be a powerful factor in the close states.

The protection organs attempt to make a point of the fact that wages are higher in this country than in free trade England. This is not a fair comparison. Why are wages higher by 50 per cent. in free trade England than in any of the protection nations of Europe?

Boodle is evidently pouring into the Republican campaign exchequer. The Blaine procession in New York City last week cost thousands of dollars and the bills were not paid by farmers or laboring men. If money alone could elect a President, Harrison would get there, but we doubt whether a Presidential election can be bought up in this way.

Senator Blair, in reporting a bill to submit to the several states a constitutional amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic, says:

"There are members in the committee who concur in the report recommending the submission of the proposed amendment to the states who do not by such action indicate their approval of the adoption of the amendment as a part of the constitution, nor that they would themselves advocate its ratification by the legislatures of the states."

Where the Republican party is weak beyond repair is in the fact that it is the party of monopolies, trusts and the modern methods by which the very poor are oppressed and swindled by the very rich. Protection results in making a small rich class richer every year and in making the large poor class poorer. And if we would know what protection does for the laborer look at some of those highly protected countries in which Mr. Blaine has been sojourning.—New York Herald.

President Grant, in his message sent to congress Dec. 7, 1885, said:

"With this addition to the revenue, many duties now collected, and which give but an insignificant return for the cost of collection, might be remitted, and to the direct advantage of consumers at home. I would mention those articles which enter into manufacturers of all sorts. All duty paid upon such articles goes directly to the cost of the articles when manufactured here, and must be paid for by the consumers. These duties not only come from the consumers at home, but act as a protection to foreign manufactures of the same completed articles in our own and distant markets."

In the same message he advocated the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee. This is going farther than President Cleveland has gone in his message.

A FARMER'S VIEW OF THE TARIFF.

The farmer statesman of Tiskelwa, Illinois, is a robust thinker. That he has been a stalwart republican is evinced by the fact that upon the three occasions of John A. Logan's [illegible] ate, Mr. Whiting was selected as the person to present his name to the republican caucus. He is vice president of the Farmer's Alliance of Illinois, and recently prepared an address upon the tariff question, of which the following synopsis will give an idea of his vigorous methods of handling a subject. Farmer Whiting is sound on the tax question:

"For some months past, from a sense of duty to my fellow toilers on the farm, I have embraced many opportunities to discuss the decline of agricultural prosperity—the cause and cure. From a like impulse I am at this meeting to speak for tariff reform.

"While I believe our high tariff opposes all interests, including the manufacturers themselves to a considerable extent, the farmer is its special victim. He is compelled to sell his products in competition with the cheapest labor of Europe and Asia, and is forced to buy his supplies at prices largely fixed by combines and trusts, aided by a 47 per cent. tariff to cut off foreign competition. Our great outlay for farm tools [illegible] 20 per cent., as testified by Mr. Buford, of Rock Island, and other manufacturers. In the new adjustment of national taxes about to be made, can the farmer afford to be indifferent? Can we safely yield to the claim that the tariff is to be fixed by its friends, which means that the protected interests shall adjust it to suit themselves? It is time that class interest should be relegated to the rear. The public interest, in the name of the people, should come to the front and assert its supremacy.

"This reduction to be made of $100,000,000 of national taxes should be made a blessing to the people. It should mean cheaper necessaries of life. But strangely, no naturally, the protected interests propose to trade off the general public good for any scheme which will have them in the enjoyment of the war tariff. Great money interests never willingly surrender their advantages. Hence comes the ludicrous proposition, boldly made by the protected interests, that the reduction of national taxes be made by removing the taxes from spirits and tobacco. There did not seem to be much danger that so absurd a plan would command serious attention when it was first advocated by Mr. Randall and Mr. Kelley, but when Massachusetts and other great states dominated by the tariff confederacy in state conventions indorsed this scheme and distinguished statesmen seeking the presidency and lesser positions bowed in submission to this selfish class demand, it was time for some vigorous protests. The farmers, through their granges, alliances and institutes, have with great unanimity denounced this vicious proposition. It is encouraging to note that the attorneys of the high-tariff confederacy are getting ashamed of the "free whisky" part of their platform, but they are determined to sacrifice the $30,000,000 tobacco tax that they may continue to sell us dear lumber, salt, coal, clothing and other necessaries of life. In the name of the farmers of the great northwest I demand free lumber rather than free tobacco. The taxes on tobacco have a reformatory flavor, and all the money goes to the public treasury. The tariff on lumber mostly excludes Canadian competition, and protects a combine embracing the various branches of the trade from the pine woods to the village dealer. This combine extorts in excessive charges not less than $4,000,000 annually from the consumers. While the tobacco tax goes wholly to the public treasury, the tax upon lumber goes mostly to private pockets. The poor pioneers on the bleak prairies of the northwest, who send their wheat 4,000 miles and sell on a free trade basis, must pay a bounty to the lumber combine to hurry up the destruction of American forests. Western farmers use their share of tobacco, but they prefer that the $30,000,000 of reduction of taxes shall be on lumber, salt, coal, clothing and other necessaries of life. On these, where $1 reaches the public treasury at least $5 goes to private pockets. Taking $30,000,000 of tariff taxes from these reduces the surplus that amount, and saves the consumers $150,000,000.

"The public should take special notice that our protection friends, in their arguments, are changing front. We no longer hear of 'infant industries,' 'Scarcity of capital, machinery and skill,' so long urged by Henry Clay and Horace Greeley, is now obsolete. They choose to forget the declarations of Mr. Clay in 1838, when he said that protection was to be temporary—that the infant industries had now nearly grown to manhood and would not much longer require protection. They ignore the fact that the war tariff now in full vigor was given to them as a compensation for the direct taxes on their manufactured goods, and that this direct tax was long ago repealed. They forget the promise that was then made that the two should go out together. The claim now made that protection is to be perpetual, the higher the better; that the war tariff submitted to through patriotism and necessity, and which [illegible] tax, is to be a permanency, though its exactions of money embarrass the treasury. The new doctrine is that taxes are a blessing, and not an evil. If every person in the United States would confer upon me one cent each, it would project me with $60,000,000. Continue this to each member of my family, and the protection would be greater; but if continued, too far, the givers would open their eyes to the fact that protection to one is robbery to another.

"The standard argument for protection as now urged, is that labor here is paid higher than in Europe. It sets up the claim to be the cause of these more liberal wages, and to be their chief champion. A largely unoccupied and growing country, affording opportunities and demands for labor, is the cause of high wages. If manufacturers have a claim for bounties on the score of American wages, much more has the farmer, because he competes with the cheaper labor. But grant to our protection friends what they claim—a bounty sufficient to make up the difference between wages [illegible] are only one half there what is paid here. As the census reveals that the element of labor is less than 20 per cent the cost of the goods, a 20 per cent. tariff will cover more than the entire labor, and 9 per cent. will pay the difference. This was about such a protective tariff as prevailed from Washington's time to the war of 1812, and meets the demands of the difference of wages here and in Europe. Yet tariff reformers who propose to leave an average duty of 30 per cent are denounced as 'free traders' and a wail goes up that this will ruin our manufacturers. Nine per cent of the tariff pays the claim made in behalf of labor. But our war tariff exacts more than five times this amount. Is the balance all or 63? No. It costs the tariff aristocracy a large amount to keep a lobby at Washington to watch congress. Their agents sent to Europe to fish up tariff arguments cost something more. The Western Tariff bureau, which they maintain to instruct westerners in the beauty of the system, is another charge on the tariff confederate treasury. They take occasionally a turn at elections. They take their families to Europe for summer vacations, and it is said, spend on their trip $70,000,000 in gold, and come home loaded with the pauper goods of Europe. We farmers know that their agents, which they keep near us watching for an opportunity to get mortgages on our farms, are amply supplied with money. These items help to reveal why our protected friends dislike to let go their grip; why they have formed a confederation, offensive and defensive, to stand by each other to maintain their long-enjoyed advantages. They begin to have fears that our western farmers are growing intractable. The editor of the New York Tribune recently tried to get together in that city a farmers' congress, to be composed of representative farmers favorable to a high tariff. Though all expenses were to be paid the congress failed. But Warner Miller, the wood-pulp man, and a few associates, were improvised into a committee to issue an address to the farmers of America and get up the form of petition to be signed by farmers and sent to congress. These papers were got into the patent insides of the country press and were sent to leading farmers. They stated that farmers are suffering, but don't know what hurts them. Mr. Miller's committee revealed the secret—they needed more tariff. Potatoes and barley are only protected 15 cents a bushel when they should be 25 cents. Cabbages are on the free list; they should be protected 3 cents a head. The drop on wool from 12 cents to 10 cents was a great calamity. Tobacco is excessively taxed, which limits its use.

"I have not learned that any farmer was caught with this chaff. But it brings to mind the old story of the man who owned a donkey, which he found would live on coarse provender. He could exist on thistles. The owner thought he would try shavings. As the donkey refused this diet, the owner conceived the idea of making the animal look at his shaving through green goggles. The protective confederates are trying a similar experiment with the farmers. We are a little dazed and puzzled, and cannot quite understand how it is that they demand to be protected by a 47 per cent. tariff—can stand no abatement—and yet claim that a high tariff makes their goods cheaper. They claim this bounty also on the ground that they consume a part of our farm products. We begin to comprehend that we consume all of theirs—that they, as a class are more necessary to us than we are to them. If we continue to pay them bounties so many times the cost of all the labor employed, we begin to fear we shall not long be able to pay our own laborers. Love is said to be blind, but self-interest is more so. Let us take an object lesson; see how it is when the other ox is to be gored. When Chicago was to be rebuilt after the great fire, the people of that city called upon congress to adjourn protection for a year. They asked for free [illegible] and copper, and other materials. "Protection to home industry" and "Keep your money at home," were not applicable when they became customers—must pay out of their own pockets, and could not charge the tariff bounty, to dealers and consumers below them.

"The Protectionist in this emergency forgot his creed—that a high tariff makes things cheaper. Congress granted the request, except the lumber lords were too much for Chicago, as they still are for the country. One more object lesson. Some years ago Senator Farwell, then a member of the house, brought in a bill to allow the purchase of free ships on the Clyde, instead of buying them of John Roach, on the Delaware. This privilege was to apply to an association of gentlemen of Chicago and New York to enable them to buy steel ships to establish a fast line across the ocean. Mr. Farwell stated that he did not yield up his protection, but that in this particular case it should not rigidly apply, as these ships could be purchased abroad for $100,000 each, while than $250,000.

"The pioneers of Dakota, Minnesota, and other frontiers annually build a Chicago, though not compacted into magnificent blocks along paved and lighted streets, but composed of frail tenements scattered over wild prairies—a meagre defence against their arctic storms which so often embrace them in an icy death. If Chicago in her extremity needed to be released from the exactions of a high tariff, who will say that the poor, hard pressed, shivering pioneer, struggling with nature to establish a home, should not be granted like privileges? A rural paper has just declared fierce war on all who advocate the "damnable heresy of free trade." Let this editor be one of these pioneers with an exhausted purse and a few little ones, might work a change of heart. Let family and stock be threatened with destruction for want of supplies and better shelter, the thought might come to him that as he sells his wheat for a pittance to go 4,000 miles to market and is there rated on a free-trade basis, it would be wrong in his government, which did not need the money, to permit him to buy his lumber, coal, clothing and blankets in the cheapest market, though that market might be over the sea, where his wheat found its destination. That law which should compel him to buy only at home from protracted combines, thus robbing him of a large percentage of his hard-earned money, might then appear to him to be that 'damnable heresy.'

"The farmers of the northwest, in the aggregate, purchase in tools and machinery what rivals in cost that line of steamships. Is it any more 'damnable' for them to desire to buy these in the cheapest market than it was for Mr. Farwell to ask a dispensation of the tariff laws, that his friends might buy cheap ships in a foreign country? This one-sided system, which gives bounties to one class at the expense of others, is bearing its evil fruits. There was said to be nearly $28,000,000,000 net gain to the nation during the last two census decades. The farmers, who constitute half the people and perform three fourths of the hard work, received less than one-fifth of this gain, and this gain came by the opening of new farms on the public domain. The old farms declined in average value from $3,200 to $2,400.

"Our great agricultural and mining state of Illinois was on the road to pass sterile and rocky Massachusetts in her per capita wealth up to the enactment of the war tariff. Twenty years of high tariff has reversed this natural order of progress. Where Massachusetts has made $1.50 per capita, Illinois has not made quite $1, and this short dollar is heavily mortgaged to Massachusetts. Agriculture is declining generally in prosperity. In New York, except in special lines, it is in ruins. The fine farming districts of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio show marks of dilapidation. Illinois farms in the aggregate have declined in value during the last 10 years more than $700,000,000. That great garden of America, stretching from Kansas to Minnesota, is heavily weighed with mortgages. It should be an object of national concern that our rural population shall be prosperous and progressive. A decline of agriculture can not continue long before all classes and interests will suffer.

"We ask for our farmers no special favors, and will cheerfully pay our share of taxes needed by the government. But we will not always meekly submit to be taxed purposely to take money from our class to bestow rich bounties upon others."

DRESS DESIGNING.

A Bright Woman Who Makes $65 a Week Supplying Fashion Sketches.

New York City is a woman not yet 30.

She supplies a large number of the fashion sketches issued with the fashion sheet of a big pattern house and she earns $65 a week at her trade.

"It is something," she said, "that only a few women, and not half a dozen men, can do.

"For me, I often walk the streets till I get my idea. In an hour on Broadway or Fifth avenue, I catch a hint from the draping of a skirt that suggests something to me, or I see a combination of colors of a novel use of some fabric that sets my mind working in a new direction.

"Then I go home and make a wash drawing. It may not embody anything that I have seen or it may take hints from twenty different costumes. To be fit for use as a pattern supplement it must be original, it must be up with the times, but not too far ahead of prevailing ideas, and it must be practicable, that is it must be such that an ordinary dressmaker or a woman with a knack for cutting her own gowns can reproduce it without too much trouble.

"If I am sure I am on the right track and want to be certain of turning out something especially clever, I get the material for such a dress as I am thinking of and get a girl of good figure to try it upon. I stand her up in the middle of the floor and I stick in pins and pull out pins and try this effect and that effect hours at a time.

"It's tiresome work, but I always feel repaid, if it ends by being a love of a gown.

"Sometimes it won't come to suit me, and then I lie awake half the night and plan how I will compel it to be the confection I want in the morning. When I get it I sketch it and color it and write directions for cutting the pattern for it without a minute's delay.

"I've designed some hundreds of dresses, and I have seen them walking about on hundreds of women. I always feel bad if they don't take care of my dresses, too."

THE ANIMAL MILLENNIUM.

Capacity of Our Dumb Friends for a High Degree of Intelligence.

"I do not go the extent of some scientists," said a distinguished student of the animal kingdom recently, "in the opinion that a time will ever come when the lower animals will possess the power of speech, but I firmly believe that in a few generations certain of these animals will advance to a wonderful degree in the matter of intelligence.

"Experiments have been already made in England which demonstrate that some of them are capable of almost everything except to speak. Shepherd dogs have been taught to count and, at the order of their master, will bring back a certain number of sheep from the pasture, if credence is to be placed in the reports which have been made from time to time within the last few years and which bear the stamp of authenticity.

"In order that the education of animals like cats, dogs and horses, which have already shown a certain degree of mentality, may be brought to the highest state of perfection it is necessary that the more intelligent of these brutes should be kept apart from others of their kind and should be interbred, while their off-spring should be treated in the same way.

"A horse trainer of national renown told me not long ago that he had been working on that theory for many years, and that he found the off-spring of trick horses were much more easily taught than those which came from animals never trained in the ring.

"The associations with which an animal is surrounded have a wonderful effect upon its mental development, even though no special pains have been taken to educate it, as is the case with our common household pets which have for generations been subjected to gentle influences. Yet the progenitors of these domestic animals once roamed the forest as wild and untamed as the panther in the Indian jungles, and even now are found wild and ferocious in certain parts of the world.

"How, then, can we forecast the extent to which they can be educated during the myriads of ages of the future?"

THE COST OF STOPPING A TRAIN.

An Exact Computation and a Surprising Result.

Said a well known engineer on the New York Central railroad the other day, talking with a reporter:

"It is not generally known what loss of power is involved in the starting and stopping of an ordinary train of cars. There is required about twice as much power to stop a train as to start one, the loss of power depending upon the momentum.

"A train going at the rate of 60 miles an hour can, by means of the Westinghouse airbrake, be stopped within 120 yards from the first application of the brake. Now, enough power is lost to carry this same train 15 miles over a plane surface.

"First, there is the momentum acquired by the train flying at this remarkable rate of speed, then the loss of steam in applying the brakes, and lastly, but not least, the extra amount of coal to compensate for all these losses.

"By computation I have ascertained that every complete stop involves a cost of $1.17."

Morals of Marriage.

Mrs. Gilgall—"I am so delighted to meet you, Mr. Catchpenny. I understand that you have traveled very extensively."

Mr. Catchpenny—"I have been over Europe twice, visited Australia, tramped through a large portion of South America, and have knocked about the United States a great deal."

"You have written several books, I hear."

"Yes; my latest is just out."

"What is the title, pray?"

"The Ethics of Marriage."

"Oh, I see you are a bachelor."

Preserving Dandelions.

Place at the bottom of the barrel all the dandelions likely to be used at one cooking, then cover over with salt, then as many more dandelions and as much more salt, and so on until the barrel is full. Place a cover on top with a heavy weight on it. The moisture in the dandelions will make enough brine, but if not, use a little water so that the dandelions will be covered.—Good Housekeeping.

THE TALK OF SOCIETY.

Mrs. Sherwood Defines the Talk of Society—"Small Talk" Described.

What is that language, the most complicated, curious finished in all the world, which the greatest of men have regretted that they could not learn, but which the lightest of minds have excelled in, the language most indispensable to women, most useful to men, the talk of society?

With its ready quotations, its wisdom, seriousness, and with gravity which is not ponderous, and animation which is not frivolous, catching the aroma of the moment, distilling the essence of culture, now for an instant pedantic, yet suggesting a lifetime of patient reading, the conversation of the good talker is the highest result of the best training of this fugitive thing which we call our mind.

This talk of society, no doubt, should always be generous. Give and take must be its motto. It must be light and not wearisome; neither selfish, repititious, nor egotistical. It should be choral and antiphonal. We are no longer soloists, but a part of that chorus which goes on forever. One must use one's mind to become a good talker.

It is like the practice of any other art—a talent first, and then a talent cultivated. One must not imagine that a sudden rush of brilliant ideas will flood the soul of an agreeable conversationist without the natural exercise of an average intelligence.

That which is called "small talk," which may be a set of agreeable nothings about the weather, but which becomes an [illegible] subjects, all this forms the basis of conversation between new acquaintances, and should take for its first principle the consideration, as to a subject, of something which shall prove agreeable to the individual with whom one is to converse. One must think rapidly of the person's age, social position, known proclivities and pursuits, so as to form an accurate idea of what to talk about.

A conversation created apropos of the moment, with no ulterior motive than that of being agreeable, such is small talk. It may be called the "current coin" of society; it is the key to first pleasant impressions.

To shine in small talk one needs intelligence, tact, good humor, and geniality, sympathy and adaptability, but no great genius is needed such as is needed by the brilliant conversationist as a Macaulay, Sidney Smith, Tom Appleton, and Evarts.—New York Sun.

TREADING FOR CLAMS.

How Connecticut Farmers Enjoy a "Day Off" in Summer.

Arrived at the shore Connecticut farmers and their wives and children make preparations to "tread for clams." The men remove their boots and stockings, put on a pair of old trousers and walk down the sloping beach when the tide is low. The women do likewise, except as to trousers.

The festive round clam nestles in the mud all along the shore, waiting patiently to be caught, and the hunters wade along, sometimes in water up to their arm-pits, feeling for the clams with their naked toes.

When the water is up to or above the waist it is something of a trick to bring the clam to the surface without going entirely under water after it. Some parties use a long handle rake, but the experts, when they note the presence of a clam, seize it with their toes after the fashion of the armless man in the circus, and with a peculiar kicking motion raise it to the surface of the water, from whence it is transferred to the bag, which is carried over the left shoulder.

When the tide gets high the work ceases, and all hands seek the shore. There, on a flat rock, and within the confines of the old wagon wheel tire, the clams are placed, hinge up, and upon them a fire of light brush is started. In 30 minutes the hot coals are swept off, the steaming clams are transferred to plates, and the party enjoys a feast fit for the gods.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Young Women Are Invited To Ponder Over It.

Mrs. Jacob S., an estimable woman living in a small town in the West, discovered early in her matrimonial career that she had not been fortunate in her choice of a husband, for Jacob proved to be excessively lazy and shiftless, doing almost nothing for the support of his wife and the round faced little children.

Several years after her marriage, Mrs. S. heard of the approaching marriage of Jennie Krale, the daughter of a neighbor, and meeting the girl one day, she said:

"Vell, Shennie, I hear you vas tinkin' 'bout getting married. Vas dot so?"

The girl with becoming blushes, admitted the truth of the rumor.

"Vell, Shennie," said Mrs. S., "it would be vell for you to dink dwice before you marrys anybody."

"Did you think twice about it when you were married?" asked Jennie, rather resenting the intimation that she had not made a wise choice.

"Vell, yes, I did," replied Mrs. S., after some little hesitation. "I did dink dwice, Shennie; but I made von grade meestake, von grade meestake, Shennie. I did not dink der secund time undil after I vas married."

Phervent Phancy Phloored.

"Phairest Phlora," wrote an amorous youth who is smitten with the phonetic craze, "phorever dismiss your phears, and phly with one whose phervent phancy is phixed on you alone.

"Phriends—phamily—phather—phorget them, and think only of the phelicity of the phuture. Phew phellows are so phastidious as your Pherdinand; so phein not phondness if you pheel it not. Phorego phrolic and answer phinally, Phlora."

"Oh, Pherdinand, you phool!" was phair Phlora's curt reply.—Galveston News.

An Apt Application.

Mrs. S.—"See here, my boy, Mr. Brown doesn't like you to swing on his gate."

Precocious Boy (who has lately been to Sunday school)—"Well, I don't care for Mr. Brown, nor his man servant, nor his maid servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that's his."

Who Gambetta Was.

A man was overheard yesterday informing his friend in a street car that Gambetta was "the greatest Italian gambler that ever lived."—Philadelphia Enquirer.

THE COSTLIEST BEAN.

Description of the Mexican Vanilla Bean—Where and How It Grows.

The plant producing the vanilla bean, which, by the way, is the costliest bean on earth, is one of the rarest of any that furnish flavors, odors or flowers; for only very peculiar soil, climate and cultivation have yet insured its highest qualities for any considerable time.

Misautta, a city of Mexico, situated in the centre of a valley surrounded by mountains some 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, is supposed to be the original home of vanilla. It has been found in various parts of Central America, both north and south, but in no place possessing qualities so rich and rare as in the valley of Misautta.

Ingenious, painstaking and scientific Frenchmen have cultivated it on the Island of Mauritius, and were successful in producing a fair imitation of vanilla which they termed the "Bourbon" bean for which they found a market in England and France, but the crop of each succeeding year deteriorated until it sold for less than half the price of the genuine vanilla bean from its original home in Mexico, where it has been from time immemorial cultivated and prepared for the market by the native Mexican.

The native Mexican plants it near the base of a scrub oak to which he fastens its vine. It produces no fruit during the first four seasons. After that it bears fruit for eleven or twelve years.

The fruit or pod grows in large clusters similar to those of the banana. Its blossoms are in clusters much like our lilac, [illegible] rose. The pod at first is large and green like the banana, but when ripe, it soon shrinks until it has a dry and withered appearance. All its virtues and excellences seem to be absorbed in the bean.

These receive numerous manipulations from the native producers. These patient, diligent workers affirm the absolute necessity of a ninety days' handling in order to ripen and retain the best qualities of the vanilla bean. They expose them to the sun for a certain length of time and then place layers of them between blankets until the alternate layers of blankets and fruit form a large pile and in this condition they undergo a "sweating process."

Thus several times each day they are exposed alternately to the sun and the blanket covering until all moisture is removed. They are thus handled until each bean attains the color of a very dark cigar.

Notwithstanding all this sweating and drying process the bean must be kept in rooms or vaults where the temperature of the air must be so uniform as to avoid all extremes of heat, cold, moisture or dryness.

The tonka beans grown in South America, are often palmed off upon the unwary as genuine vanilla. The tonka is aromatic in odor and strong in taste. It is good to perfume snuff and to scent clothes to preserve them from the ravages of the moth, but a wretched substitute for the vanilla bean.

The tonka is worth fifty to sixty cents a pound, while vanilla commands a ready sale at from $[illegible] to $14.

Last year the vicinity of Misautta alone exported sixty million beans, the great portion of which reached New York. They are used by druggists and confectioners, and are a very important article of commerce.

WHERE THE DEFECT LAY.

A Brother Forces the Colored Preacher's Resignation.

There is a colored congregation of Methodists, who, until a couple of months ago, were led in the paths of rectitude by a very young preacher.

He was a fluent son of Ham and the length of the words he hurled at his hearers was only limited by his lungs at one effort.

This was all very well for a time, but when the elders of the church saw that the argument adduced did not draw the erring ones nearer to the big white throne a change was decided upon and a committee of one was appointed to ask for the preacher's resignation.

When the errand had been stated the preacher indignantly asked what the congregation expected for nothing.

"Waal, now, doan' yo' see, we duzzent expect——"

"No trouble 'bout dat; but say, yer isn't fur enuf eddicated to——"

"Kaint I talk confluently enuf ter suit the most rapashus?"

"Dat's it, chile, dat's it; hole right on whar y'ar now. Yo' kin talk and yo' kin talk, but yo' doan't pint out; yo' kin argify and yo' kin argify, but yo' doan't show wharin."

The resignation was handed in directly.—Kansas City Star.

Learn from the Quakers.

The Quakers have many habits and customs that "worldly" people would profit by imitating.

They do nothing unnecessary, and save labor and wear and tear of mind whenever they can. When tools are hung up against a wall there the shape of the tools is painted against the wall, so that when a tool is removed and not returned the silent monitor remains.

Where a hammer, saw, or monkey wrench is hung up there its shadow is painted so that if the real hammer is gone the painted hammer remains to remind the owner that the borrowed tool has not been returned.—Boston Fibre and Fabric.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State Convention, held at Detroit last week was a large and enthusiastic gathering. The present state officers were all renominated with two exceptions. Below we give the ticket placed in nomination and also the platform in full.

THE PLATFORM.

The Republicans of Michigan, assembled in State convention, reaffirm their faith and confidence in the principles expressed and candidates selected by the National Republican party at its recent convention in Chicago. That in Benjamin Harrison we recognize unquestioned integrity, high statesmanship and devoted patriotism and pledge to him and to his honorable and distinguished associate our vigorous and earnest support.

We do most fully and cordially indorse the wise, economical and statesmanlike administration of Gov. Cyrus G. Luce, and commend the vigilance and courage with which he has discharged the official duties of his great office. We are also justly proud of the faithful and capable manner in which every State officer has discharged the duties of his office during the present term.

We believe in that system of protection which has fostered our industries and has made us the best fed, clothed, housed, and the happiest and most civilized of all peoples; which has rewarded labor with wages and conditions unequaled elsewhere, and which has made our markets the envy of all the world.

We arraign and censure President Cleveland and the Democratic party for their bitter and disloyal attacks upon American industries and American labor, and especially for their direct and merciless blows aimed at Michigan and those of her great industries which have advanced her to the front rank in the march of States. We arraign them for placing wool on the free list, the effect of which has already been to greatly reduce its price, and which, if adopted, would absolutely drive from our farms the growing of sheep.

We believe in a reduction of the increasing surplus and national revenues to governmental requirements by all lawful means, and favor such a method as is not by an English free trade and democratic system and that such reduction should be made with the encouragement of our industries and the better wages of our workmen ever in view.

We cordially indorse the progressive temperance legislation enacted by the last Legislature, and regret that its full results were not realized owing to technical defects in the laws, held by the Supreme Court to be in conflict with the Constitution. We record ourselves as in favor of the impartial enforcement of the temperance laws of the State and recommend to the next Legislature the re-enactment of a local option law that shall be free from constitutional objections.

Upon the question of pensions to Union soldiers, their widows, orphans and dependent ones, the Republican party, unlike its great antagonist, is not divided by sectional prejudices, but its sentiments are everywhere grateful and patriotic. We believe the debt of gratitude we owe to the brave defendants of our national life can only be discharged by extending to them such aid, and especially to their maimed, health-broken and crippled survivors, and such care for the dependent ones of deceased soldiers as will bring to them comfort and do honor to a patriotic people, blessed with a bountiful land and an overflowing treasury. We indorse the sentiment recently uttered by our leader, Benjamin Harrison: "It is no time now to use the apothecary's scale to weigh the rewards of the men who saved the country."

We believe in such legislation, both State and national, as will impose severe penalties upon organized trusts and monopolies that unjustly oppress our citizens and do hereby declare our opposition to their existence.

The Republican party being in favor of protecting the products of American labor, also demands the protection of the American laborer and is therefore unalterably opposed to unrestricted Chinese immigration and to the importation of all foreign contract labor; and believe that such laws should be enacted as will give protection to our laboring men against such competition and secure to them the wages and labor to which they are rightfully entitled. We believe, also, in such legislation as will ever protect the laborer in the preservation of his rights and secure to him safety in his employment.

We condemn the Democratic members of Congress from this State for their willing submission to the dictation of Southern Democratic members, and for their unreasonable and disloyal action upon "the Refunding of the Direct Tax bill," passed by the Senate; and which legally and justly by its provisions would have turned into our state treasury nearly half a million of dollars and have reduced the burdens of Michigan taxpayers by so much.

We also arraign the Democratic party for its criminal insincerity in indorsing the Mills bill and nominating candidates who have declared their opposition thereto;

Its pretended love of party and the barter and sale of its principles and the name of Democracy to a meaningless fusion for the sake of votes;

The scurrilous vetoes of pension bills;

Its incompetency and failure to reduce the surplus;

And for the prostitution of the civil service so soon following the glowing declaration of the newly elected democratic President, are but a few of their inconsistencies.

We invite the intelligent voters of Michigan from their unnumbered callings to an examination of the record and principles of the Republican party. And we solicit the co-operation of all who believe in the continued industrial progress of our state, and in the protection of labor, the farm and the workshop against the dangers threatening them.

THE CORN PALACE.

The Eighth Wonder of the World Receives Friendly Notice From all Parts of the United States.

The following editorial, accompanied by a splendid engraving of the corn palace of 1888, appeared in the Pacific Rural Press, of San Francisco, in its issue of July 28:

Probably no more unique recognition of the eminence and importance of a local product was ever conceived than that which was embodied last year in the design and construction of the "Corn Palace" at Sioux City, Ia. It attracted wide attention as the original and only corn palace. St. Paul had its ice palace, St Louis its veiled prophet, and New Orleans its mardi gras, so Sioux City claims the distinction of having its corn palace. This year it has been decided that the corn palace shall be repeated, and that it shall be made more attractive than that of last year; also, that it shall be kept open a longer time, at least a month, to the festivities. The adoption of articles of incorporation places the Sioux City Palace Exposition company among the permanent institutions of the city. The capital stock of the corporation is $250,000, and its promoters are said to be the strongest and most energetic citizens.

Our engraving shows the corn palace of 1888, now in process of construction. It is more pretentious in style than that of last year. Norman towers have risen high upon the foundations which supported the Moorish pavilions. The building is otherwise extended. The exposition in the palace will open September 24th and continue until October 6th. Californians who expect to be in the northwest during the progress of the affair should make a note of it and attend.

NEAR THE ARCTIC SEA.

Twenty Men Who Are the Most Northern White Residents of this Continent.

Among the most inaccessible parts of the world is the region in the northern portion of this continent along the lower course of the McKenzie River. For six months in the year, amid the ice and snow of the long winter, it is impossible to reach this region at all, and at the most favorable periods it takes three months' hard travelling from Winnipeg to gain the most northern white stations. In this bleak corner of the earth live about twenty white men. A few of them are married, and have their wives with them. They live further north than any other white men on this continent. They are missionaries of the English Episcopal and Roman Catholic Churches, and some of them, like Bishop Bombas, has lived in this unattractive country for over twenty years. Their field of labor is a country of magnificent distances, and some of their stations are over a hundred miles apart. Birch canoes and dog sledges have until recently been the only means of communication.

There these white men live entirely cut off from the rest of the world during the greater part of the year. Their rough wooden houses were built of timber that in many cases was floated in rafts far down the big river. Recently a little steamer has been placed on the McKenzie connecting a few of the stations. The isolation in which they have lived is thus easier for the most of them to visit each other now and then.

Though the region where they have exiled themselves is not at all inviting, the efforts of these men are among the most successful in the whole field of missions. They are laboring among the Tukudh Indians and the Eskimos. The Indians, who number 6000, are all professing Christians, and good work is carried on among the Eskimos who inhabit the shores of the Arctic Sea at the mouth of the river.

The centenarian may not be a musician, but it is certain that he is beating time.

BLAINE GETS HOME.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—The steamer City of New York, with Mr. Blaine on board, was sighted at 1:15 o'clock this morning. She was then off Fire Island. She was expected to remain at Quarantine until about daylight this morning when the steamer Sam Sloan will reach there and Mr. Blaine will be taken from the City of New York to the smaller vessel. The Sloan, which will have the reception committee on board as well as a large delegation from the Republican club and many prominent invited visitors, will at once come up to the city. Carriages will be in waiting, and Mr. Blaine will then be driven to the hotel without delay, and without display.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—The parade in honor of Mr. Blaine last night was conducted with much eclat, despite the detention at sea of the great apostle of protection. Fifth avenue's sidewalks were crowded, and as the gay paraders, with bands, banners, and torches, swept along a continuous roar of applause resounded in their glad ears. The striking novelty of the occasion was the multitude of flags displayed. Every man in the procession waved a flag on his cane. There were big flags, little flags, and all sorts of flags. The big campaign ball, fourteen feet in diameter, was greatly applauded as it was rolled along. This ball is an imitation of one that was used in the campaign of 1840. "Keep the ball rolling" was a favorite "slogan" of the Harrison men of that day, and it is intended to roll the new ball clear across the country to the Pacific coast.

THE CANNON BALL.

NEW YORK, Aug. 11.—At 7 o'clock yesterday morning the steamer Laura Starin took a large party of Republicans down the bay to the steamship City of New York and boarded that vessel. After greeting Mr. Blaine, he and his party were taken aboard the Starin, which steamed up the bay again with her distinguished passenger. On the trip up an address of welcome was delivered by President Bartlett, of the Republican club, to which Mr. Blaine replied, expressing his gratification at reaching home again, and at the warm welcome his friends were giving him.

Arriving at the pier carriages were taken, and through streets lined with cheering people the party was driven to the Fifth Avenue hotel, where a large crowd was gathered, among them Mr. Morton, candidate for vice president. A speech was called for so vociferously that Mr. Blaine appeared at the head of the stairs and thanked the people for their welcome.

An informal reception was held during the day, and at night the Maine statesman was serenaded and addressed a great throng, giving his views on the coming campaign, and especially dealing with the policy of protection, which he said his trip abroad had more than ever convinced him was necessary to the laboring masses of this country.

The meeting had been called by the workingmen and the speaker was enthusiastically cheered. After the speaking Mr. Blaine retired and another informal reception was held.

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—Mr. Blaine and party left New York Monday morning, arriving in this city in time for supper. At night he spoke to a large audience, after which there was an elegant display of fireworks. Mr. Blaine spoke at several towns while en route here.

The River and Harbor Bill.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 13.—The river and harbor bill became a law without the president's signature. No memorandum is written, but the president stated Saturday afternoon that while the bill contained items to which he could not sign his approval the great bulk of the work provided for is so important to the best interests of the country that he was unwilling to obstruct it by a veto.

BISHOP HARRIS SERIOUSLY ILL.

The Evening News received a cablegram from London last Sunday morning announcing the sudden and dangerous illness of the Rt. Rev. S. S. Harris, of Michigan.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—Rt. Rev. Bishop Harris, of Michigan, is at the point of death at Langham hotel. Yesterday it was believed that his death was only a question of a few hours, but consultation of three physicians last night gave hopes he would survive at least long enough to see Mrs. Harris, who sailed from New York yesterday a week ago.

The bishop's daughter is with him here.

At Lambeth conference he was worked on several committees, and was preparing to go abroad for a tour in the Holy Land, but before leaving England he accepted an invitation to preach in Winchester cathedral. In the midst of his sermon he suddenly ceased speaking, clasped his hands to his head and sank insensible in the pulpit. The congregation was dismissed and the bishop removed to the deanery, where the physicians who were called said he was suffering from an apoplectic stroke. He was brought to London in the hope that he would be well enough to sail for home on the Saale last Thursday, but when the time came for the departure the bishop was in a comatose condition and believed to be dying.

There has been a slight improvement since then, but his recovery is scarcely probable.

SAMUEL SMITH HARRIS, Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Michigan, is 47 years old. He was born in Alabama and graduated at the university of Alabama in 1859, passing his examination for the bar the following year. After practising law several years he became a candidate for holy orders, and was ordained deacon and priest in 1869. He held pastorates in Montgomery, Ala., Columbus, Ga., New Orleans and Chicago. In 1878 he was elected to the bishopric of Quincy, but declined. That year, with Rev. J. Fulton, he founded "The Living Church" and was editorial manager for six months.

In September, 1879, he was consecrated bishop of Michigan. He received the degree of D. D. from William and Mary in 1874, and that of L. L. D. from the university of Alabama in 1879. Several sermons and reviews of his have been published, besides the "Bohlen Lectures" a book which created some stir in the religious world.

Later dispatches show that his attack, though serious, is not hopeless. Dr. T. A. McGraw, of Detroit, is with the bishop. His wife and son are now on the Atlantic and expect to reach London by next Sunday morning.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by purifying and enriching the blood, improves the appetite, aids the assimilative process, strengthens the nerves, and invigorates the system. It is, therefore, the best and most thoroughly reliable alterative that can be found for old and young.

"Think of a Family

You can bring that about, if you want to. Possibly some father or mother may read this, to whom it isn't true; but we doubt it.

Consider what it means. It means that you have a Cyclopedia in your living room, your evening family-room, the handiest place to get at when you want it; and when a subject comes up that one of the family wants to know more of, you turn to it in your Cyclopedia, just as you turn to a word in your dictionary.

This set of books can be the means of constant growth in knowledge, in use of the mind, in the habit of seeking light on whatever is dark, for you and your family, if you will have it so. Or you can neglect it as many neglect their dictionaries. All we said was that you have your choice.

You are thinking, "Can I get it?"

If you really want it, the very fact that you want it almost certainly puts it within your reach. We should like to see an exception or hear of one. We don't believe there is any.

If you desire the end, let us hear from you. You shall know the means.

The International Cyclopedia is one for you. Latest, most comprehensive, briefest, cheapest. (These words lean on one another a little.)

THE BLANKET MATINEE.

The Blanket Matinee at C. D. Bills' track last Saturday was very poorly attended. The interest manifested in these little home races seems to be on the gain. Why wouldn't it be a good plan to organize a good trotting association here?

There were four races on the program, the 3-minute, 3-year-old, free for all and half mile running. Bidwell drew Joe Rothschilds in the 3 year-old class, leaving Dabol to start alone. Frank Silvers by consent of parties substituted Bulletin. It made a very pretty race, the horses being lapped on each other the full mile. Bulletin did himself credit, it being the fourth time he was ever driven a mile at speed.

Three minute class was very hotly contested, it taking five heats to decide the winner.

BASE BALL CURVES.

Tecumseh vs. Manchester at 9:30 this morning.

The crack amatuer club, Eclipse, of Detroit, will play the Tecumseh club Friday at 3:30 o'clock. Admission 15c. Grand stand 10c.

Clinton and Ridgeway occupy the diamond at Bills' park this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Admission 10c.

The game between the north and south sides of Chicago street Thursday afternoon last, proved to be quite an interesting performance, and resulted in victory for the south siders. The score stood 24 to 14.

The first nine went to Manchester last Friday loaded for victory, and would undoubtedly have brought home Manchester's scalp had not the weather interfered. Tecumseh put in Stickney and Dixon as a battery. The boys played a good game and did some hard hitting. Holderman and Dixon each made a home run. The game was called on account of the rain, the score standing seven to six in Manchester's favor, at the end of the sixth innings. Tecumseh's nine has won most of her games in the last innings, and stood a good show of doing so this time.

Do you want an education—collegiate, preparatory, musical, normal, business? There's no better, cheaper, more enjoyable or healthful place to secure it than at Adrian College. Calendar of Dr. G. B. McElroy.

Rev. F. Adkins is taking a brief summer vacation. Rev. J. J. Phelps, of Grass Lake, will occupy the pulpit of the Baptist church next Sunday, morning and evening. Mr. Adkins will be home again on the following Sunday.

The Tecumseh City Band had a very pleasant time during the Knights Templar encampment at Devil's Lake. They took a thorough water baptism Sunday, but the weather was pleasant during the other days of their stay. The Knights were abundantly satisfied with their music.

The "Cold Spring" Berry Farm at Clinton, D. R. Gibson, proprietor, has proved itself the standard berry ranch of the county, both in yield and quality of fruit. Mr. Gibson will produce an extra large quantity of Strawberry Raspberry and Blackberry Plants for this fall and next spring's trade, as his last spring's stock was entirely inadequate. Give him a call.

The Tecumseh Bicycle Club numbers 18 wheelmen, and the club can be set down as one of the enterprising institutions of this town. They have lately undertaken and accomplished the graveling of the strip of sandy road in the Davidson district between Tecumseh and Ridgeway. The club are entitled to much credit for their enterprise. They wish to extend their thanks to Frank Davidson and others, who so kindly assisted them.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for September concludes George Macdonald's beautiful story, "The Elect Lady," and gives two more chapters of the new story, "Genevieve; or The Children of Port Royal," begun in the August number. It contains also a short story by Florence B. Hallowell entitled "A Little Flirtation," with a very excellent moral. The departments are well kept up, and poems and short articles all entertaining and useful. It is a good summer number.

"Peterson" for September is on hand. We always feel that there is a lack in the month till this old favorite reaches us. It invariably keeps up to the mark, year after year, for first-class writers and artists furnish the literary matter and the illustrations. Scores of thousands have long known the fact, and each year adds to the list of those who find this periodical an absolute necessity. Terms: Two dollars a year. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Bellevue, O., band arrived last night on the C. J. & M.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Snell are visiting their parents in town.

Prof. McElroy, of Adrian College, is expected to preach next Sunday morning in the Presbyterian church.

Miss May Wilkin, of Erie, Pa., and Miss Nellie Powell, of Jackson, are guests of Mrs. A. W. Slayton this week.

Capt. W. A. Wetherhead, of South Lyons, is in town this week attending the funeral of Mrs. Timothy Deuel, which takes place to-day.

A. D. Hall went to Lansing Monday to attend the commencement exercises at the Agricultural College. His son, Frank, graduates this week.

The remains of Mrs. Timothy Deuel, whose death occurred at Kalamazoo asylum Tuesday, will arrive on the morning train and the funeral will take place immediately.

A cheap excursion to Detroit will leave Adrian via the Wabash Western railway August 22d, 1888. Fare for the round trip only $1.50. Tickets good returning until August 24th. A special train will be run. For particulars apply to the Wabash Western ticket agent.

The schools of Tecumseh will begin September 3d. Examinations for admission will be held at Superintendent's office in Central building, on Friday and Saturday, August 31 and Sept. 1. Examinations will not be severe, simply to enable the examiner to classify the applicant. All pupils who wish to be classified and can do so, please be present upon the above named days. Pupils, however, will be received at any time and placed in classes suitable to their attainments.

The Britton Eagle has ceased to scream, and passed over to the majority, as did the Clayton, Pittsford, North Adams, and many other papers whose patrons have pursued the root-hog-or-die policy. There is not a village in the state whose interests could not be furthered by a newspaper, and but few which do not desire such an institution. The trouble is, they are too penurious and short-sighted to give it life preserving support.—Addison Courier.

Horace Greeley was a farmer, and his magnificent cabbages cost $3 a piece. It is also said that Senator Tom Palmer, of Michigan, eats butter that costs $3 a pound. He makes it himself, from the cream of imported Jersey cows. The Senator is a great lover of fancy stock, and he has a charming wife who is a connoisseur on the subject of dogs. She owns some of the finest canines in America, some of her Mensheim spaniels being so delicate that they have to be fed with a spoon.

All boys will enjoy the frontispiece of the August Wide Awake, "The Crisis," a wild Canadian river scene, also the accompanying story of peril and pluck, "Saved on the Brink," by Macdonald Oxley; and both boys and girls will have great fun over James Otis' complete serial, "A Neck tie Party," for it is a jolly story. One of the most beautiful things in the number is by May Kendall, an English writer, the author of the novel That Very Mab; it is a "parable" entitled "The Temple of Music," and teaches one of the most precious of life's lessons—that "he who loses his life shall find it"; all who have ever given up an ideal for the sake of duty will be the happier for reading this exquisite story.

In turning towards the regular departments in Harper's Magazine for September, the reader's attention will be caught and held by Du Maurier's full-page sketch of one of the "speeches one has to live down." It is not only amusing and witty, but it is also noteworthy for the faithful representation it gives of the way in which the English shake hands, or rather, the attitude they assume when about to perform this act. In the "Easy Chair" this month Mr. George Wm. Curtis sits up a little severely, and makes a few vigorous and timely remarks about blackguardism as distinguished from satire, and about the necessity and the bravery of true censorship. The true significance of the last anniversary of Gettysburg furnishes a more agreeable theme.

The crop report for the month of July is in the hands of the printer. Oats are estimated to yield 36 bushels per acre in the southern counties, 29 bushels in the central, and 21 bushels in the northern. The condition of the other crops may be regarded as generally satisfactory. The average condition of corn in the southern counties is 94, and in the central and northern counties 90, the average condition of potatoes in the southern counties is 93; in the central 86; and in the northern 87. The average conditions of meadows and pastures is, for the State, 76, and of clover sowed this year 82. Corn and potatoes promise very nearly a full average crop. In quantity hay is scarcely more than three fourths of an average crop, but it has been secured in prime condition. Apples promise in the southern counties seven tenths, and in the central counties eight tenths, of an average crop.

A MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

A mystery has recently become public here which is causing considerable comment. Mrs. Dan Frost left home July 3 to visit friends in Jackson, in company with another lady, a relation by the name of Sisson. Mrs. Frost also intended to visit friends in Ann Arbor, and left Mrs. Sisson and other friends and relations on July 9 at 9 a. m., saying she was going to the depot to go to Ann Arbor, since which nothing has been heard of or from her, either at Ann Arbor or Jackson. She has not been at Ann Arbor at all, and her husband thinks there has been foul play. They never had any trouble, and she always wrote promptly when away from home. Mrs. Frost owns a good home here, and also property in Clinton.

Mr. Frost thinks she may have gone to see friends in Illinois or Michigan, but he cannot understand why he receives no word from her. They have been married several years, have no children and have always lived very happily together. She owns the house and lot on Logan st., this village where they reside, and she has lately fallen heir to other property from an estate in Clinton. The matter is as great a mystery to Mr. Frost as it is to the neighbors.

ALUMNI REUNION AT THE VALLEY.

The annual reunion of the students of Raisin Valley Seminary was held in the grove in front of the school, last Friday afternoon.

Owing to a misunderstanding in advertising the meeting there was rather a small attendance, only about 150 people being present.

The literary exercises were held in the school room, and consisted of music by the Raisin Glee Club, a poem by May Taylor and short speeches by old students. At the business meeting of the association Edgar Rogers was elected president for the ensuing year, Hattie Hathaway secretary and Warren Shepherd orator.

The audience then repaired to the lawn, where a bountiful lunch was served. The entire afternoon passed pleasantly, without anything to mar the pleasures of the day. Among those present from a distance may be mentioned Edward Taylor and family, Edith Cattell, Mrs. Pierson and children.

In the evening the Alumni Association held its meeting. The regular meeting should have been held at the close of the school year, but owing to the prevalence of the measles it was thought best to postpone the meeting until the evening after reunion. The business meeting was called at 7:00 by Pres. Green. The routine business was soon finished. Charles Vaughan of '88 was elected president and Celia Jones of '79 orator. The Raisin Glee Club furnished music for the literary exercises, which began at 8 o'clock. Minnie Westgate of '83 read an essay and Grace Jones of '86 a carefully prepared Alumni history.

After the literary exercises the members of the Association and a few invited friends adjourned to the dining hall to partake of a banquet. This closed the exercises of the day, but not until midnight were the rooms quiet.

Art Exhibition in September

The new building of the Detroit Museum of Art will be opened to the public on the first of September, with a loan exhibition of art works of superior merit consisting of the famous Seney collection from New York city and other paintings of the highest grade. The gallery will be open from 9 A. M. to 9 P. M. daily, until November 15th. The price of admittance will be a fifty cent silver piece on Mondays and a twenty-five cent piece on all other days. A coin will be accepted the same as in the old Art Loan, in place of the orthodox ticket, in order to save the making of change and avoid delay at the door. Excursions will be run over all roads centering at Detroit at greatly reduced rates, the tickets to include a coupon of admission to the Art Gallery. Those who wish to go to Detroit on these excursions should indicate it at once to the ticket agent at the depot.

THE COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPH PICNIC.

Last Thursday was the day fixed for the annual picnic of the C. T. line and Putnam's Landing, Sand Lake was the place. The day proved to be a very fine one for an outdoor gathering. A cool refreshing breeze galloped over the lake and through the grove during the entire day. The company was well represented from all directions. Soon after breakfast teams began to pass through Tecumseh headed for the lake, and the procession grew in numbers all the way through Franklin. By noon a large company had gathered in the grove, the tables were spread and all enjoyed the good things with which the baskets were laden.

There were no formal literary exercises. People went to enjoy an afternoon's sport, and the whole afternoon was given up to pleasure. The steamer Manitou took several trips around the lake, each time carrying a good load of passengers. The sail boats on the lake were all out, as the stiff breeze made it a beautiful day for sailing.

Having taken a steamboat ride and a sail, and having shaken hands with pretty much the whole company on Putnam's spacious porch, we took a stroll along the bluff and called at

We found Wm. Hayden and a portion of his family at the Hayden cottage. Mrs. Hayden is spending most of the time there now, and Mr. Hayden himself drove up that morning to spend a day or two.

In the next domicile we found Mrs. Geo. Tiffany and Fred. Mr. Tiffany was away on a business trip although he has been at the lake most of the time since the first of July.

The ninth cottage in the row, formerly owned by Seymour Howell, of Adrian, has lately been purchased by Mrs. O. B. DeWolf, and we found the entire DeWolf family located at No. 9. Mrs. Sam James and Mrs. Alf. James were also stopping there.

A few cottages further we found Dr. Stevenson, of Adrian, with whom we had a pleasant chat. From him we learned that his cottage was the first one built on the lake shore, eleven years ago this spring. The next spring Judge Howell, of Adrian built one, and since then two or three have been erected every summer. There are now twenty cottages on the south shore, and about fifteen more on the west and north sides.

Before leaving, we went over to Wells' Sand Lake House and gave him a call. Both houses on the lake are having a good patronage this summer.

Although the crowd was not a large one, it proved to be a happy one. Those who remained away missed a most enjoyable day. We think a good literary program would increase the attendance, and would suggest that this feature be added to the program next year.

HEALTHY FLORIDA.

SANFORD, Fla., Aug. 6th, 1888.

DEAR HERALD.—Thinking that the many readers of the Herald would like to know the true condition of Florida regarding Yellow Fever, would say that up to the present there has been but a few cases as compared to last year. At Tampa no yellow fever now exists. At Platt City only one case now, and as the little town has been burned or nearly so, as all infected houses have been burned so that little fear is now entertained of any further raging of fever there. Surgeon-General Hamilton reports, Aug. 3d, three new cases at Manatee, Fla., making eight in all there, no deaths. One case at Jacksonville was reported last week in the case of a man and his family, who came the week before from Plant City, but have been carefully guarded so that no danger now exists of any further spread of the disease from that source. The sanitary condition of Sanford, Fla., is good. During the month past, it was feared by many that the fever would show itself here but now all feel quite easy in the matter and are looking forward to a prosperous fall and winter. The hottest day this season was on July 14th, when the mercury reached 102° in the shade; since then 80 to 98 has been the range in the middle of the day. Very little sickness here since the melon has passed.

Yours, E. HAUSE.

18th Regiment Reunion.

Comrade—The twenty-first annual reunion of the 18th Michigan Volunteer infantry will be held at Adrian, Mich., on Tuesday, August 28, 1888. Business meeting at 12 o'clock M. Lieutenant C. E. Rogers, chairman of the executive committee, informs your Secretary that one dinner ticket will be issued to each comrade as dues are paid. More than one ticket can be purchased if desired. As these reunions are the best means we have of meeting the remaining few of our old comrades let each one make a special effort to be present and spend one day in the society of those with whom we stood shoulder to shoulder in the dark days of the rebellion.

CAPT. R. P. INGERSOLL, President.
D. H. WABREN, Secretary.

LOG CABINS were the most prominent feature of the Presidential campaign of 1840. At the opening of the campaign, the opposition sneeringly proclaimed "Tippecanoe" Harrison a "low fellow," "born in a log cabin." His friends at once made the Log Cabin the emblem of the most enthusiastic of campaigns. Warner's Log Cabin Remedies and "Tippecanoe" stomach tonic are enthusiastically received by the American people to-day, because they are the remedies of the common people—simple but effective.

THE WORLD

A playground—oft with clouded skies
That o'er the rosebuds weep,
Where little troubles take the weight
Of sorrow far more deep;
Where loved toys break in tiny hands—
When hope shall check, and joys depart
In life's sweet passing prime.

A battlefield where foes meet
And unseen hosts contend
With truces all too short, they seem
With the well strife to blend.
Strife that leaves none of us unscathed,
Where'er the mastery be;
But who, till the Great Day, can tell
With whom is victory?

A graveyard, where on every side
Pale monuments arise,
To show how brief is human life,
How vain is all we prize.
A graveyard filled by memory,
Where phantoms lightly tread,
But each one points with finger raised
To blue skies overhead.

JAPANESE BABIES.

The Substitute for Whipping in Their Far-Away Country.

The babies in Japan have sparkling eyes and funny little tufts of hair; they look so quaint and old-fashioned, exactly like those doll babies that are sent over here to America, says a writer in St. Nicholas.

Now, in our country very young babies are apt to put everything in their mouths; a button or a pin, or anything, goes straight to the little rosy wide-open mouth, and the nurse or mamma must always watch and take great care that baby does not swallow something dangerous.

But in Japan they put the small babies house, or on the floor, but I never saw them attempt to put anything in their mouths unless they were told to do so, and no one seemed to be anxious about them.

When little boys or girls in Japan are naughty and disobedient, they must be punished, of course; but the punishment is very strange.

There are very small pieces of rice paper called moxa, and these are lighted with a match and then put upon the finger or hand or arm of the naughty child, and they burn a spot on the tender skin that hurts very, very much. The child screams with the pain, and the red hot moxa sticks to the skin for a moment or two, and then goes out; but the smarting burn reminds the little child of his fault.

I do not like these moxas. I think it is a cruel punishment. But perhaps it is better than a whipping. Only I wish little children never had to be punished.

FOOD OF THE PRIMITIVE MAN.

Primitive man, wherever he was first cast, whether in one centre or in more than one, must of necessity have found his food in the plant world. We cannot imagine him commencing his career learned in the art of hunting, killing and cooking the lower animals for food.

Many infer from this circumstance that the argument in favor of vegetarian practice is copied direct from nature, signed and delivered by her.

Not quite so fast. There is one interposing barrier to the free acceptance of vegetarian creed and act of conveyance of food from nature to man. Nature, herself, of her own right royal will, makes for animals, herbivorous and carnivorous, one distinctive animal food; a secretion from the living animal organism, a fluid which is a standard food—meat and drink in one—the fluid known under the name of milk.

Against absolute vegetarianism, then, we may fairly set up one exception, derived from nature as the unerring guide.

On observing the habits of animals we discover another natural fact. We find that animals of quite different natures, in respect to primitive selection of food, possess the power of changing their modes of feeding and of passing over as it were, from one class to another.

This change is distinct but limited, and we must accept it with all its extension on the one side and with all its limitation on the other.

The fruit-eating ape can be taught under privation to subsist on animal diet; a dog can, I believe, be taught to subsist on vegetable diet. But it would be as impossible to teach a sheep to eat flesh as it would be to make a lion feed on grass.—Contemporary Review.

PREPARATION FOR BUSINESS.

Notable Examples of Farsighted Shrewdness by Merchants of Holland.

A level-headed race, the Dutchmen. Realizing they are being outstripped in the foreign trade by the English and the Germans, a number of merchants have organized an association called "The Foreign Country."

The object of the association is to send young men to foreign countries, not only to get acquainted with the manner of transacting business, and particularly in the bazaars of the East, but that they may feel at home in those countries, and thus prepare the way for the establishment of Dutch commercial houses.

They propose to support these young men by paying their expenses and giving them a salary. In return the men are to bind themselves to return the whole or part of the money when they can do so without difficulty, when the money will go to enlist others.

The Dutch rightly conclude that knowledge of business or commodities is not to be learned behind desks, but by personal experience.

"Art Is Long and Time Is Fleeting."

A schoolboy asks us what Longfellow meant when he said "art is long and time is fleeting."

It is a very common phrase that the poet took from Hippocrates, who lived 400 or 500 years B. C., and perhaps he in turn stole it from some wise man at as early a period.

As we always understood it the phrase means that although life is short it takes a long time to learn the art of living. If anybody can give a better interpretation of its meaning we would be glad to hear it.—Fort Worth (Texas) Gazette.

CUTTING DIAMONDS.

The Delicate and Difficult Art of Making a Brilliant Gem.

"The majority of the people who take any interest in diamonds imagine that the cutting of the stone is the most difficult part," said a jeweler. "This is not true, however. The cutting is comparatively easy, but when it comes to the polishing the most skilful work has to be done."

The only diamond cutting and polishing establishment west of New York is in Chicago, and a newspaper of that city tells what processes they follow out there.

"In America we are far ahead of the old Dutch process," said its informant. "Here we use iron and steel machinery, while the Dutch still use the crude wooden machines.

"In Holland the only object is to cut a stone so as to have it weigh as much as possible. Not so with us. We aim to turn out a brilliant and beautiful stone.

"The value of a diamond is estimated by the amount of fire in it, and not by its weight. Not long ago we cut a four-carat stone down to three carats, and its value was increased over $100.

"A crude stone may be very fine, but if the workman does not bring out its brilliancy it is not worth anything. A diamond in the rough may be a pure, sparkling gem, but if placed in the hands of an unskilled workman it will not be any more brilliant than an ordinary piece of glass.

"The first process the rough stones pass through is the 'cleaving.' This is what most everybody calls cutting. A chisel is used to cleave off the rough parts, and the cleavage is made into diamond dust.

"Then comes the tedious part. Two diamonds are employed, each cemented into the end of a stick. The stones are then rubbed together with a strong pressure. This requires considerable experience. As it can only be done by hand it also requires considerable muscle.

"After this process the skill of the expert is tried. The gem is placed in a solder setting and is then fastened to a piece of wood about two feet long. A steel wheel eighteen inches in diameter, making 2,500 revolutions a minute, is used as the polisher. The stone in the wood is so arranged as to be balanced on and against the wheel, producing only a slight friction. Diamond dust is used on the wheel.

"An expert can tell in a minute as soon as the polishing of a facet is completed. Sometimes there are knots in the gems, and their hardness cannot be imagined. One of our workmen was four weeks polishing down one facet containing a knot, and on all the others combined he was but four days. The stones sometimes contain as many as sixty facets.

"The forms usually adopted in cutting the diamond are the brilliant, the rose and the table.

"The first form shows the gem to the best advantage. It is composed of a principal face, called the table, surmounted by a number of facets which are cut upon that part of the stone which shows above the setting, and which is called the bezel. The rose, which is very brilliant, is flat below, and cut into facets entirely over the upper surface.

"Our diamonds are obtained by importing direct from South Africa. The American market takes the best gems produced in the fields.

"No gem is so little understood as the diamond, and stones of off colors and containing flaws are easily disposed of to the purchaser. Therefore a person buying a diamond should purchase of reliable dealers who have reputations which they cannot afford to lose.

"The gems are worth from $10 to $100 a carat and a slight shade in color will make a difference of $50 a carat. The shade cannot be detected by the customer and he is left at the mercy of the dealer.

"We find a great field now in the recutting of stones. The Dutch do not seem to be able to get all the brilliancy out of a stone, and our business in diamond-cutting is principally in polishing off a half-carat and even a carat. Stones that did not seem to contain any fire at all have been turned out as brilliant as could be wished."

THE NIGHT-SHIRT POCKET.

A Small Boy Makes a Magazine of It.

The precocity of eight-year-old boys has often been the theme for newspaper comment, but I think I know of one who is entitled to particular distinction for his brightness. The other day he importuned his mamma for a night-shirt, "just like papa's," with a pocket in it. His mother made him one, and the first night he wore it he went to bed in high glee.

In the morning, when his mother took the robe off she found in the one pocket a couple of seed cakes, three matches, a toothpick, a small silver watch, several pieces of cough candy and the boy's pocket handkerchief. When the little fellow was questioned as to the reason for the very varied assortment, he replied:

"Well, I thought if I got hungry in the night time I would need the seed cakes, and of course I'd want the toothpick afterward; if I wanted to see what time it was by my watch I would have to have a match, and I was afraid of coughing, so I put the candy there."

His excuses were equal to his preparations at any rate.

Dismal Humorists.

We have rather too many dismal humorists in literature just now.

The success of a few genuine humorists has tempted whole flocks of dullards into the fields of fun, and they are fast converting it into a literary cemetery, peopled with the ghosts of departed pleasantries.

If funny lecturers and funny sketch writers would only give us the dead jokes of long ago in their habits as they lived, the resurrection would be more tolerable, but they dress them up to suit their own conceits, and in so doing take all the laugh out of them.—New York Ledger.

His Need Quickly Recognized.

"Madam," said the tramp, with a hurt look, "I ain't findin' no fault with this pie, but how am I goin' to eat it? I'm tired an' hungry. I've walked all the way from St. Lou—"

"I beg your pardon, my poor man," said the kind-hearted lady quickly, as she substituted a knife for the fork.—Chicago Tribune.

Well Said.

If there was one half the effort made to punish criminals that is made to screen them from punishment we should have less crime and less taxation.—Quitman (Ga.) Herald.

A HOLY FESTIVAL.

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 19.

Golden Text, v. 40. Golden Text, Psalms 19—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This chapter may well be called "The Chapter of the Feasts of the Lord" or "The Chapter of Holy Convocations," the former expression, beginning and ending the chapter, and found also in verses 4, 37, while the latter is found no less than eleven times in this chapter.

Our lesson today gives an account of but one of the eight different convocations recorded in this chapter; or seven if we do not count the Sabbath, which was an institution as old as Eden.

33. "And the Lord spake." How little we are apt to think of this most weighty statement. It ought to cause us to give heed with all our powers as we remember that while other things pass away "the word of our God shall stand forever."

34. "Speak unto the children of Israel." Moses was simply the Lord's mouthpiece to the people and had only to say what the Lord told him.

"The fifteenth day of the seventh month." It is for God to appoint the day, and for us to be obedient. It was on the first day of this month that they blew with the trumpets, and on the tenth day was the great annual atonement of last week's lesson. The fiftieth year or year of jubilee was ushered in by the blowing of trumpets on the atonement (xxv. 9, 10.

"The feast of tabernacles seven days unto the Lord." In Ex. xxiii, 16; xxxiv, 22, it is called the feast of ingathering because they had gathered in all their fruits out of the field (also v. 39 of our lesson). Verses 40 to 43 tell us why it is called the feast of the tabernacles; they all took boughs and branches of trees and made booths in which they dwelt seven days, rejoicing before the Lord, as they remembered their forty days in the wilderness, when they had no crops to gather in, but they dwelt in tents and God fed them.

35. "An holy convocation," because it was a gathering unto, and in the name of, the Holy One of Israel. He was their holiness, even as He is ours, and apart from Him there is no holiness.

"No servile work." Nine times in this chapter are we told of no work, or no manner of work, or no servile work (vs. 3, 7, 8, 21, 25, 28, 31, 35, 36) in connection with these holy days. All true service ought to be joyful service, a glad thank offering to Him who speaks from off the mercy seat, and Himself is our mercy seat. All slavish work, or work done because we ought to do it, or must do it, should have no place in the service of such a Redeemer, "whose service is perfect freedom."

V. 36. "An offering made by fire unto the Lord." Twice in this verse, and five times elsewhere in the chapter do we find this expression (vs. 8, 13, 18, 25, 27). It was because of this offering by fire that there was "to be no servile work but only joy in the Lord, with deep humility of soul.

37. "Everything upon His day." Sacrifices and the number of them, feasts and the order of them all appointed by God and everything upon His day, the priests and the people had only to read aright and be obedient, and the command was: "To write the words of the law very plainly."

38. "Beside the Sabbaths . . . gifts, vows, . . . and free will offerings, which ye give unto the Lord." Israel was required to give unto the Lord for his special worship and for their own great good, every seventh day in the whole year, besides these three annual seasons of from one to seven or more days, when everything ordinary had to be laid aside, they had also to give one-tenth of all their increase besides their special gifts and vows and free will offerings.

44. Having now glanced at all the verses in the lesson (verses 33-43 were touched upon in connection with verse 34) let us look at the feasts of the Lord in their reference to Christ and to us, and may the spirit that was in Moses declare them unto us. The same spirit in Paul declares that "holy days (R. V. feast days), new moons and Sabbath days are a shadow of things to come." (Col. ii. 16, 17.) That Christ our Passover has been sacrificed for us, and that we are to keep the feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth, purging out all the old leaven of malice and wickedness. (1 Cor. v, 7, 8.) He also tells us that Christ risen from the dead is the first fruits of them that sleep. (1 Cor. xv, 20, 23.) Here then is the substance of the first three of the seven feasts, Christ the true passover, Christ the true unleavened bread, and Christ risen from the dead the true first fruits. Now the fourth of the seven feasts, in the third month, called the feast of weeks because it was just seven weeks or fifty days after the last feast, called also the feast of harvest or first fruits of wheat harvest, clearly points us to that which occurred fifty day after the resurrection of Christ, viz., the conversion of thousands of Jews when the spirit was poured out at Pentecost. But all the first fruits are not in yet, and the reaping at Pentecost was only a beginning. In James i. 18, writing to the twelve tribes of the dispersion, he speaks of the believers as "a kind of first fruits;" and in Rev. 14. 4, the 144,000 of the sealed ones of the seventh chapter are called "a first fruits unto God and to the Lamb;" then, in Rev. xiv, 15, we have the great harvest or reaping time, after the fall of Babylon, which is opened up more fully in Rev. xvii, xviii; then in Rev. xix, xx, the marriage of the Lamb, the judgment of the nations, the binding of Satan, after which comes the thousand years when Israel, in their own land, shall, from the least to the greatest, know the Lord, for they shall as a nation have been converted by the appearing of the Son of Man in power and glory, accompanied by His saints (Zech. xii, xiii); and then shall the true feast of tabernacles be kept, when "the Lord shall be King over all the earth," and "those that are left of the nations shall go up from year to year to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles, Zech. xiv, 9, 16, 17. These feasts of the Lord are Jewish feasts and carry us forward to the redemption of Israel as a nation, and the restoration of all things of which the prophets have spoken. Would you see that day and be one of those who can truly say, even now: "When Christ, who is my life, shall appear, then shall I appear with Him in glory"? Then see to it that you are, by faith in Christ, one of the righteous, in whose body is seen, day by day, salvation and rejoicing.

A Saginaw man was recently poisoned by swallowing cherry pits, but inflammation set in and spoiled her fun, and now she's gone to Jewell, in the land where cherries may not tempt and colics are exempt.

A Detroit man was sued for a small debt and produced his marriage license to show that he was exempt from garnishment, but was greatly surprised when informed by the court that the document didn't make him a married man. He hurried home, however, and informed his supposed wife of the situation of affairs, when the couple repaired to a justice of the peace and were legally married. He'll know better how to proceed next time.

Rich Find of Iron Ore.

MARQUETTE, Mich., Aug. 6.—For several months the Pittsburg and Lake Superior Mining company has been prospecting with diamond drills on the range midway between this place and Negaunee. The result of their work has just been made public, and there is a general rush for options all along that range clear through to the lake in the southern limit of this city. The drill in the last hole at a depth of seventeen feet encountered mixed ore, and at a depth of 145 feet clear ore was struck, though which the drill was worked for forty-five feet and is still working in ore. This new find is one of the most important ever encountered in all the iron bearing district, and establishes the fact that the deposit runs clear through to the lake. When the wonderful extent of this find is made known it will cause great excitement among iron men everywhere.

GRAPE JUICE FOR SICKNESS:

The art of cultivating the Oporto vines and fermenting the Oporto Grape into wine in this country, and of preserving the Grape Juice fresh without fermentation has been brought to a greater degree of perfection by Mr. Alfred Speer, of Passaic, N. J., than by any other person; in fact, he was the pioneer in introducing and advertising Native Wines. He has purchased hundreds of tons of grapes, besides his own vintage. Mr. Speer's success has arisen from the strict purity and valuable properties of his wines for invalids and feeble persons, and his reputation extends around the world.

LOG CABINS were, in the Harrison-Tippecanoe campaign of 1840 erected in the large cities and villages, and used for holding political meetings. Barrels of hard cider were placed in front of the cabins, and the "Log Cabin hard-cider campaign of '40" has passed into history as the most enthusiastic of our political contests. Log Cabins have for this reason a permanent place in American history. Warner's Log Cabin Remedies and "Tippecanoe" tonic bitters have secured a permanent place because of their excellence.

A false chord of music is a discord. A false cord of wood is about seven-eights.

I have been afflicted with catarrh for 20 years. It became chronic, and there was a constant dropping of mucus matter. It extended to my throat, causing hoarseness and great difficulty in speaking, indeed for years I was not able to speak more than thirty minutes, and often this with great difficulty. I also, to a great extent, lost the sense of hearing in the left ear, and of taste. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm all dropping of mucous has ceased and my voice and hearing has greatly improved.—Jas. W. Davidson, Attorney at Law, Monmouth, Ill.

Smyptoms of Heart Disease

Diseased hearts are as common as diseased lungs, kidneys or stomach, but far less understood. The symptoms are shortness of breath, when weepings, etc., oppression in the chest, faint, weak or hungry spells, dreaming, pain or tenderness in the side, swelling feet, dropsy, etc. The unnatural circulation of the blood in the lungs, stomach, kidneys, liver and brain causes other symptoms. The only reliable remedy for the heart yet discovered is Dr. Mile's New Cure. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Baker & Hall.

Cure of Cancer and Ulcers.

Judge T. C. McLendon writes to the Swift Specific Co.: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lives."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for years. Your medicine was recommended, and after using six bottles I was completely cured. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought hopeless."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I commenced using S. S. S. about three years ago. I had suffered from a sore throat for over a year. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl, also, had sore fingers; it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S., I thought I would see what it would do for her. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to Gen. Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood."

Professional Ignorance

Nothing is more common, nor less true, than for physicians to tell patients in the first stages of heart disease that the trouble is only nervous, etc., and of no account. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing as shown by the great number of people who die of heart disease, when its existence is not expected. Take warning. Don't neglect the first symptoms, and if you would avoid sudden death, pain, palpitation, etc., take Dr. Miles' New Cure before it is too late. Sold at Baker & Hall's drug store.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. Asa B. Bowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured." Papillon Extract of Flax Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00.

GALLANT SHERIDAN LAID TO REST.

The Bugle That So Often Called Him to Battle Rings Out His Final "Good Night" —Solemn Services at St. Matthews and the Grave—A Large Attendance of Distinguished Men Honor the Warrior's Memory—Description of the Obsequies.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 13.—At St. Matthew's church Saturday Protestants and Roman Catholics, men of all politics, of all nations, of all classes, judges, statesmen, diplomats, clergy, lawyers and laymen were assembled to do honor to the dead hero, Gen.

BORNE FROM THE CHURCH.

Sheridan. The chaplain of the senate, Rev. Dr Butler, of the Lutheran church, sat in the shadow of the Roman Catholic altar, and President Cleveland, a Calvinist, followed the Roman Catholic service, bending his head at the "dominus vobiscum." Federal officers in full uniform and Confederate captains with whom they had fought gathered side by side, sorrowing around the bier. Many handsome floral offerings were laid about the shrine. An immense general's epaulette of flowers resting against an easel trimmed with vines was presented by the Gen. Thomas post of New York. A handsome floral crescent was presented by the U. S. Grant post of Brooklyn. The Chinese minister sent a large floral plaque resting on an easel. A white cross was sent by the president and beneath it was a spray of palm sent by some unknown friend. Senator Evarts sent a cross of palms, sprays and orchids. A harp of the wreath was sent by the Loyal Legion commandery of the District of Columbia. Col. Wilson sent a wreath of pond lilies. Secretary Whitney a floral shield upon an easel. None of these were placed anywhere else than upon the casket.

Shortly after the ceremonies commenced carriages bearing the members of the diplomatic corps, the joint committee of congress, senators and representatives in congress, officers on active and retired duty of the army and navy, filled the church. Among the prominent persons present were Senators Ingalls, Edmunds, Evarts, Hoar, Dawes, Jones of Nevada, Voorhees, Hale, Aldrich, Sawyer, Chandler, Farwell and wife, Justice Harlan and wife, Secretary General Jenks, and the commissioners of the District.

At about 4 o'clock the pallbearers, headed by Gen. Sheridan in full uniform, entered at the left of the catafalque. Soon afterward the joint committee of congress appeared and were conducted to seats reserved for them in front and to the right of the catafalque, four of them occupying Gen. Sheridan's pew. They were white sashes and were headed by Senators Gray and Hampton, and among them were two Confederate Gens. Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama, and the one armed Gen. Charles E. Hooker, of Mississippi. About 4:20 the president and Mrs. Cleveland and Secretaries Fairchild and Vilas came in and took seats in the front pew on the right of the outer aisle in the rear of the chairs which had been provided for them, and which remained unoccupied during the ceremonies. Mrs. Folsom, Secretary Bayard, and Postmaster General Dickinson followed, and were seated in the vicinity.

About five minutes after the presidential party had been seated Mrs. Sheridan arrived and was conducted to her seat at the left and near the aisle. She was deeply veiled and leaned upon the arm of Col. Sheridan. They were accompanied by Gen. and Mrs. Rucker and son, Miss Rucker, John Sheridan the general's brother, and his wife. Meanwhile the diplomatic corps, many of them in full court dress, had been seated on the extreme right and front of the church. The army surgeons, Drs. O'Reilly and Yarrow, and Dr. Lane, who was several times called in consultation during the general's illness, Col. Rolfe and Capt. Kellogg, of Gen. Sheridan's staff, occupied seats to the left of the main aisle and immediately in the rear of Mrs. Sheridan. The rear of the church was occupied by a large number of members of congress and officers of the army and navy and public officials. The side galleries and an available seat in the church were occupied before the burial services began.

The services were the regular and well known ceremonies of the Roman Catholic church, and were conducted by Revs. Ryan, Kervick and Mackin, with the usual decorations, subdeacons, acolytes etc. They were very solemn and impressive, and at their conclusion [illegible]

THE CORTEGE EN ROUTE TO ARLINGTON.

[illegible] present were Senators Ingalls, Edmunds, Evarts, Hoar, Dawes, Jones of Nevada, Voorhees, Hale, Aldrich, Sawyer, Chandler, Farwell and wife, Justice Harlan and wife, Secretary General Jenks, and the commissioners of the District.

At about 4 o'clock the pallbearers, headed by Gen. Sheridan in full uniform, entered at the left of the catafalque. Soon afterward the joint committee of congress appeared and were conducted to seats reserved for them in front and to the right of the catafalque, four of them occupying Gen. Sheridan's pew. They were white sashes and were headed by Senators Gray and Hampton, and among them were two Confederate Gens. Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama, and the one armed Gen. Charles E. Hooker, of Mississippi. About 4:20 the president and Mrs. Cleveland and Secretaries Fairchild and Vilas came in and took seats in the front pew on the right of the outer aisle in the rear of the chairs which had been provided for them, and which remained unoccupied during the ceremonies. Mrs. Folsom, Secretary Bayard, and Postmaster General Dickinson followed, and were seated in the vicinity.

The services were the regular and well known ceremonies of the Roman Catholic church, and were conducted by Revs. Ryan, Kervick and Mackin, with the usual decorations, subdeacons, acolytes etc. They were very solemn and impressive, and at their conclusion [illegible]

[illegible] spoke of him as husband and father. In concluding he addressed himself directly to Mrs. Sheridan with words of consolation that her husband was a Christian, and died fortified with trust in the mercy of the Redeemer. His closing words were:

Comrades and companions of the illustrious dead, take hence your great leader, bear him to [illegible] and though you may not hope to attain his exalted rank you will strive at least to emulate him by the fidelity of your patriotism, by your devotion to your country and by upholding the honor of your military profession.

He then left the pulpit and was arrayed by the assistants in a black cape decorated with gold. On his head was a tall white hat. Then, preceded by the clergy and the altar boys carrying lighted candles, he left the sanctuary and took his position at the head of the casket. The sub-deacon, with an acolyte on either side holding a lighted candle, carried the cross to the altar rail, standing at the opposite end of the catafalque. The cardinal knelt and a choir of Dominican priests chanted "Libera Me Domine." Then the cardinal arose and sprinkled the coffin with holy water and incensed it with the burning incense. He then pronounced absolution and closed with a prayer.

The casket was then lifted by the eight artillerymen who had been assigned to that duty and carried to the street where the military escort, consisting of cavalry and artillery, was in waiting with the draped caisson upon which the body was to be taken to Arlington. Immediately after the caisson the general's horse Guy, a beautiful dark bay charger, was led. He was saddled and bridled in military style ready for a mount. The gold embroidered saddle-cloth bore the insignia of Gen. Sheridan's rank as lieutenant general, a golden eagle and three stars being woven in gold in the corners. Beneath the cloth in front were two pistol holsters. The general's military boots, reversed with spurs pointing forward, were secured in the stirrups. The horse was the one Gen. Sheridan got from Lexington, Ky., four years ago while in Chicago, and he liked it much, because in his three white feet and in other respects, he resembled his old war horse Winchester.

The procession was made up, besides the military escort, of carriages containing the president and wife, the cabinet, the judiciary, the congressional committees, diplomatic corps, and representatives of the Loyal Legion and of the Grand Army of the Republic and citizens and the march was at once taken up for the grave, the streets being lined with a throng of people who silently and sorrowfully watched the progress of the great soldier to his final home in mother earth.

It was about 1 o'clock when the funeral procession reached the cemetery at Arlington. The route had been by H street to Pennsylvania avenue, across Rock creek by the Avenue bridge and thence over the Aqueduct bridge and by the Fort Meyer road. As the battalion of cavalry entered the northwest gate the Marine band played a dirge. Arriving at the grave the light artillery skirted the picturesque hill and took up a position on the road just below. The field artillery was ranged along the side of the hill. Near the head of the grave stood the president and Mrs. Cleveland, while Mrs. Sheridan and the other mourners of the family stood near the side. The Union Veteran corps were stationed near the grave, and just behind the president and Mrs. Cleveland stood the members of the cabinet, who had attended the services at the church. Rt. Rev. John S. Foley, bishop of Detroit, conducted the services, which were brief. They included the consecration of the ground and the simple rights of the Catholic church. At the conclusion of the religious services the light artillery fired a military salute of fifteen guns and the foot artillery fired three volleys of musketry. The bugle call for "Taps" rang out on the clear air over the heads of the hushed assembly and the services were over.

Have You Any Idea What It Costs
TO MAKE A CHICAGO DAILY NEWS?

You haven't? Well, let us give you just a glimpse into the business, perhaps it will interest you.

To begin with, the work of the paper is divided into Seventeen Different Departments, each under its own responsible Superintendent. Let us take them in order as they stand on the weekly pay-roll:—

1. The Editorial Department.—This includes managing editors, city editors, telegraph editors, exchange editors, editorial writers, special writers, and about thirty reporters. THE DAILY NEWS staff is admittedly without a superior in the West, and numbers 56
2. The Telegraph Room.—To save time special wires are run into THE DAILY NEWS building, and the paper's own operators take the messages and hand them immediately to the telegraph editor. The number of operators is 3
3. The Compositor's Room.—When "copy" has passed the hands of the proper revising editor it goes to the type-setter. There are a good many of him in THE DAILY NEWS office—on an average . . 73
4. The Linotype Room.—But the compositor doesn't do all the type-setting. The "Linotype" machine "sets type" by casting a-line-of-type, on somewhat the same principle as the type-founder casts a single type. Fourteen of these machines are in use in THE DAILY NEWS office, and the number of persons required in this department is 29
5. The Artists' and Engravers' Department.—But the metropolitan daily now gives its readers not only reading matter, but also illustrations. By the aid of good artists, zinc etchers and photography by electric light THE DAILY NEWS is now printing the best newspaper illustrations in America. This takes the best service of skilled workers to the number of 7
6. The Stereotype Foundry.—The matter—type and pictures—being now "locked up" in the "forms" the work is next transferred to the foundry. A metropolitan daily no longer prints from its type. In order to print a large edition quickly it is necessary to multiply the printing surfaces, and this is accomplished by casting duplicate stereotyped plates, from which, after they have been fastened to the presses, the printing is done. Of stereotypers THE DAILY NEWS requires 8
7. The Press Room.—THE DAILY NEWS uses six double perfecting presses, capable of printing 100,000 complete papers per hour. To run these there are required men to the number of 26
8. The Mailing and Delivery Department.—"The mailers" and the delivery clerks handle over a million papers a week. The force numbers 25
9. The Engine Room.—To supply the motive power requires three steam boilers of 175 horse-power capacity, and three engines with an aggregate of 270 horse-power. All departments are lighted by the Edison incandescent system, which here comprises three dynamo machines and 500 lamps. The employes of this department number 5
10. The Circulation Department.—The paper is now a manufactured article, and it is the business of this department to develop the market for it. The average number of workers is 16
11. The Subscription Room.—All the subscriptions from out-of-town, whether of individual readers or wholesale news agents, pass through this department, and this department employs on the average . . . 17
12. The Business Office.—The general clerical work of the paper, such as receiving and caring for the advertisements—of which over fifteen hundred are received and handled every day—receiving and paying out cash, the general bookkeeping of the business, requires a counting-room force of 27
13. The Care of Building requires the constant service of three janitors 3
14. The Watchman.—To insure perfect protection against risk of fire two watchmen are constantly on duty. 2
15. The New York Office.—This engages the entire time of a general manager and assistant 2
16. The Washington Bureau.—In charge of its own special Washington staff correspondent 1
17. The Milwaukee Bureau.—To facilitate Northwestern news gathering, one man 1

From which it appears that the number of regular employees is 302

And the pay roll runs from $5,500 to $6,000 per week, aggregating during the year $300,000.

Then there is even a larger annual expenditure for white paper, and telegraph and cable tolls sometimes run nearly a thousand dollars a week. Take it all together the expenditures of THE DAILY NEWS for the year 1888 will vary very little from $900,000.

The foregoing takes no account of the special correspondents at hundreds of places throughout the country; of European correspondents; of fifteen hundred news agents throughout the Northwest who distribute THE DAILY NEWS to its out of town readers; of two hundred city carriers; of forty-two wholesale city dealers with their horses and wagons; of one hundred and fifty branch advertisement offices throughout the city, all connected with the main office by telephone, nor of the about three thousand newsboys who make a living, in whole or in part, selling THE DAILY NEWS in Chicago. This is what it costs the publisher to make a CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. It costs the reader to buy it one cent a day. Measured by the cost of its production, THE DAILY NEWS is worth its price, isn't it? The Chicago Daily News is sold by all newsdealers, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. Address

Prohibition
Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.
The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, newsy and piquant, bristling with telling points, brief, clear, sprightly, candid, earnest, convincing, fair, dispassionate, full of pithy facts and bright with sterling truths.
It popularizes the burning question of "Prohibition," brings it down to every mind and conscience, marshals its many startling facts in new and surprising forms, clarifies and invigorates its logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whatever it touches. Cloth $1.00, Paper 50 cts. Supplied by Agents, Booksellers and News Dealers, or mailed postpaid to any address by Franklin News Co., P. O. Box 838, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEATH OF BISHOP HARRIS.

Yesterday's paper contained the sad news of the death of Bishop S. S. Harris. Although comparatively a young man, being only 47 years of age, his life has been one of remarkable activity, and long years of usefulness in his sacred office seemed opening before him. He had held the bishopric of this diocese nearly nine years and during that time he had displayed great organizing and executive ability.

His death will be a heavy blow to the church. He died with his armor on at the summit of his intellectual career. All who knew him loved and respected him and will sincerely mourn his early and untimely demise.

A CORRECTION.

Having noticed in the Holloway correspondence in a recent issue of the HERALD that the people of that village felt somewhat aggrieved over the fact that the Britton Cornet Band failed to make their appearance on the evening of July 28th, the aforesaid correspondence having laid the blame of their non-appearance on the shoulders of Mr. H. H. Osgood, we wish to make a statement in regard to the matter, exonerating him from blame.

The band had simply agreed to be present for a neighborly call on the people of Holloway, and it was found impossible at the last moment to attend. BRITTON CORNET BAND.

SHE TOOK BEER

A Salvation Soldier Sells a Seller.

One of the "sample-rooms" which line the northern side of Alabama street, was the scene yesterday of an amusing incident.

These gentlemen were engaged in a pleasant conversation when in walked one of the female soldiers of the Salvation Army. She was attired in the regulation uniform of blue, and carried under her arm a bundle of the Battle Cry. As she walked along she distributed copies of the sheet.

Seeing what she evidently regarded as a trio of promising sinners at the table, she walked over to where the three gentlemen were drinking their beer. She tapped the New York drummer on the shoulder. He looked up in astonishment.

"Take this paper," she said, thrusting a sheet into his unwilling hand.

"Thanks," he replied.

"Now," said he, "won't you have a glass of beer?"

"Yes, sir, thank you," was the unexpected answer.

The astonished bartender drew a glass of foaming beer and handed it to the woman in blue. She took it, and the drummer placed a nickel on the counter.

The soldier held up the amber liquid a moment and looked at it. The beer was certainly tempting. What her intent was could not be divined. In a moment she settled the question.

She walked to the front door and dashed the contents of the glass into the street. Then she began to preach a temperance sermon.

But the drummer was mad and would not hear it; and the others were mad, too.

"Give us three more beers."—Atlanta Constitution

"This tariff agitation is ruining business," the Republicans tell us. Then why is the Senate framing another tariff bill to prolong the agitation two months longer?

The "dark lantern" bill is what the Republicans called the Mills bill. But it seems that the Republican Senators are getting up a dark lantern bill of their own now.

A scheme is on foot to have Speaker Carlisle and Blaine hold twelve joint debates on the tariff, during the campaign. A splendid idea. By all means let the debate go on.

1860. PLATFORM.	1888. PLATFORM.
Free soil,	Free rum,
Free men,	Free tobacco,
Free speech:	Free taxation:
And they got there.	And they'll get left

The irony of politics is beautifully illustrated in that plank of the Republican platform which arraigns the Democracy for "its failure to reduce the surplus." The Democratic majority in the House have been striving for eight months to pass a tax reduction bill. The Republican record is "quite the contrary, thank you."

The Detroit Evening Journal, a high tariff paper, has these sensible remarks about the cause of the low price of wool this year. It takes the same position that the HERALD did in July that the low price of wool this year is due wholly to business causes and not to tariff agitation. The truth is the tariff has but little to do with the price of wool any year.

Quinine affords a striking illustration of the benefit which a reduction of taxation brings to the people. The Medical Record says that in 1878, when there was a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem on quinine, 196,475 ounces were imported at the average price of $2.83 per ounce; while last year nearly 5,000,000 ounces were imported at an average cost of 73 cents an ounce. And this may be taken as a measure of the benefit which millions of people in this country have received through the removal of the taxation on quinine. Let all monopoly taxes go.

The Port Huron Herald is getting impudent. It is firing knotty questions at the late Gen. Alger in this fashion:

Gen. Alger says that the farmers of Michigan favor protection. This is the kind of stuff he has been feeding Harrison's admirers down in Indianapolis on. Does Gen. Alger really believe that the farmers of Michigan and of the country favor a system that has concentrated in the hands of 1,000 millionaires more wealth that all the 7,000,000 farmers of the country can ever hope to possess? It would be singular indeed if the farmers of Michigan were anxious to perpetuate a system that has shingled their farms with mortgages and changed their balances in the savings banks into chattle mortgages.

The attempt to represent the hat manufacturing industry as opposed to tax reform by the methods of the Mills bill has already been decisively refuted by that very reliable publication, the Hatter and Furrier. Now we have the testimony of Mr. Edwin G. Sanford of the great hat manufacturing firm of Bridgeport, Conn., who says that "free wool and dye stuffs mean cheaper hats, steadier and more remunerative employment for operatives and a foreign as well as a home market for manufacturers. "With free wool," he says, "the American manufacturer can undersell every foreign competitor and pay higher wages." Evidently the Republicans will not make much out of their effort to create a shifter's boom. N. Y. Star.

Among the latest converts is Marshall Field, of Field, Leiter & Co., Chicago, one of the largest and wealthiest employers of labor in the United States. Mr. Field has been a life long Republican, but has decided to support President Cleveland because his administration and the Democratic policy on the tariff are, as he explains it, "distinctly on the side of the business interests of the country." Mr. Field declares that there is no free trade to be apprehended; that the wise and moderate reduction of tariff duties proposed by the Democrats is sorely needed by the whole country, and that the Republicans have blundered fatally in allowing the Democrats to get ahead of them on the important reform.

PRICES OF WOOL FOR 51 YEARS.

Record of the Prices Received by a Michigan Farmer for that Period. Under High and Low Tariffs.

The Jackson Patriot. The table of of figures therein, we received from Mr. Wooden about two weeks ago and have been at work collecting data for a similar article. Our statistics however will keep until some future time and we print the Patriot's article entire:

"The Patriot has just received the subjoined letter and accompanying table from Mr. J. W. Wooden, of Tecumseh, Mich., which explain themselves. They show the prices for wool actually received by Mr. F. A. Dewey, a Lenawee county farmer, who kept an annual record of his sales for more than half a century.

The list of prices is the first statement of the kind, for so long a period, we have even seen. The tables heretofore given both official and unofficial, have been made by dealers and commission merchants, showing prices in the large markets like Boston and New York, which are higher than those received by farmers. This makes Mr. Dewey's record all the more interesting and instructive.

The record of prices actually received by a Michigan farmer for 51 years is not only a curiosity, but is exceedingly valuable. Set down at the time sales of wool were made, kept without reference to any theory as the effect of legislation upon prices, it is unimpeachable evidence. None can gainsay it.

Significant facts are presented. From 1837 to 1843 the tariff on wool was low, but the price was considerably above the average. By the whig revision of 1843, which went into effect in 1843, duties were increased and the price declined. By the democratic revision of 1846—the so called Walker tariff—duties were lowered again, the act making them less than they had been at any time for over twenty years, and the prices at once advanced. By the republican revision of 1857, which remained in force until 1861, the duties fixed by the democrats in 1846 were made still lower, and prices remained substantially unchanged.

Then came the war period, lasting nearly four years, with an enormous consumption of woolen goods by the government, and a long period of inflation, lasting seventeen years, with large issues of paper currency, the price of gold rising to 285, July 11, 1864, and averaging 258 for the entire month.

For 1867, the year our highest wool tariff was enacted, the price of gold averaged 138; it was 139 for the year 1869; 133 for 1870; 115 for 1875; and within a fraction of 105 for the year 1877, the last one it brought a premium. All these years the prices given by Mr. Dewey were the amounts he received in depreciated paper currency.

As Mr. Wooden points out, wool has sold at lower figures during the past fifty years under high tariffs than under low tariffs, and it has also averaged lowest for ten consecutive years when tariff was the highest. From 1867 to 1884 the tariff was unchanged. That was a period of great fluctuation in prices. Whatever the effect of the tariff may have been it had no steady and uniform influence. In 1872 Mr. Dewey sold his wool for 60 cents, in 1873 for 40 cents, in 1878 for 30 cents, and in 1884 for 25½ cents. In the six years from '72 to '78 the price fell off one-half, and all of those years the tariff was at its highest and was unchanged.

We now invite the careful attention of our readers to the letter written by Mr. Wooden, and also ask them to give more than a cursory examination of the accompanying table of prices for wool received by Mr. Dewey for the years named therein. The letter is as follows:

TECUMSEH, July 28, 1888.

EDITOR PATRIOT:

Sir:—There seems to have been quite enough said about wool and woolen goods to convince the most prejudiced minds against a reduction of tariff duties. But, feeling interested in the arguments brought to bear on the matter, I visited an old neighbor in the township of Cambridge, Lenawee county, by the name of F. A. Dewey, who bought his first land or farm of the government, and has kept sheep in that township since the wolves would permit. He has also kept an account of sales of the products of the farm, and knowing this I called upon the gentleman and got the prices at which he sold his wool for a period of 51 years, ending with 1887, excepting four or five years, and those are filled with prices got from his son, who is now occupying the old farm, and raises as near the same grade of wool as the old flock as maybe.

I find that for eleven years just before the war, including the years '50 and '60, his wool averaged 40½ cent. Then taking the ten years, including '78 and '87, the average is but 30 cents. Taking these periods of time would, I think be a fair comparison, as gold was at a par before the war period, and in '78 was returned to a specie basis, so gold was at par again in that year.

Then again, take period from 1846 to 1860, commonly called the low tariff or free trade period, and all thro' this period his wool averaged 88 cents. Then take the period from 68 to 87 of twenty years of protection, and the average is 36 cents; and besides to enhance the price of this period, gold, a part of the time at least, was at a premium; in '68 the highest premium was 50 cents, and gradually along to 1876, when 16 cents was the highest premium. So you see, to have sold at a gold basis would have brought the average price down for twenty years to about 36 cents. Before the war prices were not so fluctuating as they have been since.

Then again, I see that there is not the same number of sheep kept in this part of the state as there was before the war, not by two-thirds, about one where there were three.

Now, perhaps the tariff has made no difference, but wool has certainly been lower since we have had the tariff. At no time did wool sell as low as 25 cents, and but one year as low as 26 cents, before the war, taking the entire period from 1837 to 1860.

Trusting that you will use these few lines in a way that will help to advance the ideas of tariff reform, I will say that these prices are not made by the board of trade, but are the actual prices received by this farmer for his wool.

J. W. WOODEN,
Tecumseh, Mich.

The table of prices sent by Mr. Wooden is as follows:

Year.	Price per pound.	Year.	Price per pound.
1837	62½ cts	1864	98½c s
1840	56 "	1865	63 "
1841	50 "	1866	60 "

1845	28 "	1870	39½ "
1846	26 "	1871	51½ "
1847	29 "	1872	60 "
1848	28 "	1873	40 "
1849	29 "	1874	44 "
1850	37 "	1875	41 "
1851	42 "	1876	36 "
1852	33 "	1877	38 "
1853	30 "	1878	30 "
1854	34½ "	1879	36½ "
1855	36 "	1880	35 "
1856	35½ "	1881	35 "
1857	45 "	1882	35 "
1858	37 "	1883	30 "
1859	44 "	1884	25½ "
1860	46 "	1885	30 "
1861	38 "	1886	29½ "
1862	49 "	1887	30 "
1863	55 "

The farmers are urged to vote for the republican ticket and a high tariff, upon the theory that the party and the tariff will increase the price of wool. The table shows, however, that the prices have averaged the highest when tariffs were the lowest. The fact is also admitted by high tariff advocates. In 1883 the National wool growers' association said:

"The price of wool from 1854 to 1860, under a low tariff was, to the grower, forty six and five-eights cents, while to-day, under the tariff of 1866, it is less than 30 cents."

Mr. G. W. Markham, protectionist, who represented the wool growers association before the tariff commission in 1882, said:

"The average price of medium wool in Boston for 35 years before the war and under a low tariff, was nearly 43 cents. The average price of the same wool for fifteen years under the tariff of 1867—except for 1871 and 1872—was materially less."

In 1883, Senator Frye, of Maine, a dyed in the wool protectionist, speaking of the high wool tariff of 1867, said:

"Domestic wools have gone down in price from the time the Morrill tariff was enacted until to-day."

The same year, in the senate, Senator Sherman, of Ohio, a simon-pure protectist, said:

"In 1867 the price of wool was 51 cents; in 1870, 46 cents; in 1880, which was an abnormal year, 40; but to-day I am told these wools sell from 36 to 40 cents per pound. So the result of the policy of protecting the wool grower has been—as it is in all industries—to gradually reduce the price. Under the operation of the existing laws (the tariff of 1867) the price of wool has gradually gone down."

These statements made by distinguished protectionists are verified by the prices received by Mr. Dewey, the Lenawee county farmer, for his wool; though in 1867, when Mr. Sherman gave the price at 51 cents, he received 44 cents; 1880, Mr sherman quotes the price at 40 cents, he received but 35 cents, and so on; but probably the senator's prices were those prevailing in eastern markets, which are usually higher than those paid to farmers; but the smaller prices received by the growers than those cited by Mr. Sherman make his position stronger than he presented it.

Protectionists have a hard struggle with the facts, and with their own admissions, when they try to make it appear, for political effect in the pending campaign, that the tariff on wool is of great benefit to the farmer.

ANOTHER ACCESSION.

The number of Republicans who are flopping over to Cleveland is increasing so rapidly that it is difficult to keep track of them. The latest accession of much importance is Congressman Fitch of New York. Two years ago he ran on a tariff reform platform as a straight out Republican against Viele a protection Democrat, and wiped out a Democratic majority of 3,000. He supported the Mills bill in Congress and made one of the strongest speeches delivered in its favor. Finding that it is a hopeless task to fight for tariff reform in the Republican party, he finally concludes to withdraw and gives his reasons in the following letter.

FIRE ISLAND BEACH, Aug. 13, '88.

Hon. Donald McLean, President Twenty third Assembly District Enrolled Republicans:

MY DEAR SIR—I herewith resign my membership in the Republican association of this district. This resignation, under the rules, carries with it, without further action on my part, that of my place in the District Committee, and on the delegation to the County Committee, and the chairmanship of the Committee on Resolutions and membership of the Executive Committee of the county organization.

"My reason for this resignation is that I am not willing to advocate or support the new doctrines upon which the party managers have decided to make this campaign.

"I am in favor, as were Garfield, Arthur and Folger, of a reasonable revision of the present tariff in the direction of decreasing the cost of the necessaries of life, and of supplying American workmen with cheaper raw materials for manufacture. I believe that such revision will increase wages and production in this country, and will lighten somewhat the heavy load of poverty and hardship which so many people in our city carry hopelessly from year to year. I am absolutely opposed to any reduction of the tax on whisky. In a few months after the repeal of the internal revenue tax, there would be more distilleries than there are school houses in Harlem, and on every business block in our district a bucket-shop would, with profit, sell whisky bought at wholesale for twenty-five cents a gallon, for three cents a glass.

"The Republican party leaders have determined to make a campaign in which the expression of views, such as those above indicated, shall be described as free trade attacks upon American industry, and those who hold them shall be credited with a burning desire to aid the British workingmen, whom they have never seen, as against their own friends and countrymen. Mr. Blaine's keynote for the campaign, applied to our district, is that we are from now till November to accuse the Democrat and revenue reform business men in Harlem, who, in private life, are in partnership with us in all commercial, charitable, social and religious affairs, of being engaged in a conspiracy, inspired by England, to ruin their own country and degrade their fellow citizens. I have no desire to take part in such a campaign. I fancy that England has in this district about as many adherants as China has, and that the voters who will vote this fall in Harlem and Yorkville for a revision of the tariff are as sincere friends of American industry as any of us are. And I very much prefer, if necessary, to be in a minority for the rest of my life rather than to make a successful campaign on what seems to me to be ridiculous and unfounded misrepresentation of the efforts and motives of my neighbors. I am, with sincere regard and respect, your friend,

ASHBEL P. FITCH.

Those who wish to go to Detroit on these excursions should indicate it at once to the ticket agent at the depot.

LOG CABINS were the most prominent feature of the Presidential Campaign of 1840. At the opening of the campaign, the opposition sneeringly proclaimed "Tippecanoe" Harrison a low fellow, "born in a log cabin." His friends at once made the Log Cabin the emblem of the most enthusiastic of campaigns. Warner's Log Cabin Remedies and "Tippecanoe" stomach tonic are enthusiastically received by the American people to-day, because they are the remedies of the common people—simple but effective.

SPECIAL.

Whereas, From day to day vast numbers are being stricken down with the fell disease Rheumatism, which seems to be greatly on the increase.

And whereas, The nation has within a short time been called upon to mourn the sudden loss of many of our public men, such as Vice-President Hendricks, Gen. John A. Logan, Sec'y Daniel P. Manning, Gen. McClellan, and many others.

RHEUMATISM.

I was cut in the wrist by a broken bottle, from which I suffered extreme pain. I called a doctor, who pronounced it sciatic rheumatism. My right side became paralyzed, leg and arm badly withered, and my joints were so stiff that there was but little action in them. About six weeks ago I began taking Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup with marvelous results. Since then I have left off the use of crutches entirely, and only use a cane, and for the past few days I often forget it and walk without any aid. To say that it has greatly benefited me but poorly expresses my idea of your Rheumatic Syrup.

THE WONDERFUL PILLAR

LESSON IX, THIRD QUARTER INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 26.

Text of the Lesson, Num. ix, 15-23—Comment Verses 15, 16—Golden Text, Ps. xliii, 3—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This fourth book in the Bible, called the Book of Numbers, tells us in the first chapter of the numbering of the people after they left Egypt, and in the twenty-sixth chapter of the second numbering, thirty-eight years later. At the first numbering there were 603,550 men of war (i. 46); at the second numbering there were 601,730 men of war (xxvi, 51); but in the last numbering there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron had numbered at the first, except Caleb and Joshua (xxvi, 64, 65); all the 603,548 had died in the wilderness because of their sin in murmuring against God (xiv, 26-31)

V. 15. "On the day that the tabernacle was reared up." That was on the first day of the first month of the second year, then this cloud which had already proved their guide, their shield and their avenger covered the tabernacle, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. (Ex. xl, 17-34.) So also, when the temple was completed, the cloud of glory filled the house. (II Chron. v, 13, 14.) It was a visible manifestation of the presence of God

"The tent of the testimony," because in it was the ark of the covenant containing the two tables of testimony, the law testifying to the righteousness of God (commandments), and the blood upon the mercy seat testifying to the atonement from the consequences of a broken law and to the righteousness which God provides.

"Fire by night" "To give them light (Ex. xiii, 21). God's word is a light to our feet and a lamp to our path (Ps. cxix, 105). This fire had continual light, the sun, moon and the pillar of fire (Rev. xxi, 23). I am the light of the world, he that follows Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life"

"Until the morning," is an expression that always arrests my attention, since I have been led to live day by day looking for Him, loving His appearing, then shall be "the light of the morning without clouds," when the upright shall have dominion over the ungodly, and when the joy shall come that ends all weeping, because "the morning star has arisen (II Sam. xxiii, 4. Ps xlix, 14, xxx, 5, I cor. xxii, 16). Are you in sympathy, dear reader? Does your heart say: "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning, they that watch for the morning, and in His word do I hope." (Ps. cxxx, 5, 6.)

16. "So it was alway." "Lo! I am with you alway." "He hath said I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. * * * for He is Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today and forever.

17. "Israel journeyed. * * * Israel pitched their tents." Nothing had Moses or Aaron to say in this matter, the cloud decided all. The soul that now waits upon God sincerely desiring His guidance and His will in all things will surely be guided by His word and His providence as plainly as Israel was by the cloud; only be sincere and be just as willing to stay as to go, or to go as to stay. Be warned by Jer. xlii, xliii; be comforted and established by Ps. xxxii, 8; only dissemble not in your heart.

18. "At the commandment of the Lord." Twice in this verse, twice in verse 20, and three times in verse 23, do we find this expression in our lesson: just seven times, signifying a perfect obedience. The same is noticeable in Ex. xl, 19-32, in connection with the erection of the Tabernacle. "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" "if ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love;" "this is my commandment, that ye love one another" (John xiv, 15; xv, 10, 12), see some of the words of Him who was in all things the perfectly obedient one. If we would know the joy and comfort of the spirit dwelling in us, we must be cheerfully willing and obedient, as Jesus said that He came not to do His own will, nor seek His own glory (John vi, 38, viii, 50), we must be able in some measure to say the same if we have His spirit dwelling in us.

19. "When the cloud tarried long." If it was a very pleasant place, an Elim and not a Marah (Ex. xv, 22-27), we may suppose they would be content to tarry as long as God pleased, but if the surroundings were not agreeable, how trying it must have been to tarry long in such a place! We often think we are content with the will of God and even take delight in it, but He who reads the heart proves to us, by some change of circumstances or by asking us to tarry long in, unpleasant surroundings, that self is still unsubdued in us.

20, 21, 22. "When the cloud was a few days, * * * from evening unto the morning, * * * two days or a month or a year." How uncertain of the future, how dependent upon God, how impossible to make plans for the morrow! And yet are we not taught that we can only go here or there, and do this or that "if the Lord will?" Jas. iv, 15. Fancy a visit to the camp of Israel and an introduction to Moses, the great leader of the Lord's hosts. We ask him, how long do you propose remaining at this encampment? With eyes turning toward the pillar of cloud he replies, I know not. Which way will you journey when you do leave here? With eyes still fixed upon the cloud come the same reply, I know not. Where will your next camping ground be? and again the same meek reply, I know not. And yet you, Moses, are leader of this great host! No, not I, but Jehovah, who dwelleth among us in the Tabernacle, and whose glory you see in the cloud. He redeemed this people, He careth for them, He will lead us to the promised inheritance, and we have only to trust and obey Him.

Rather too tame a life for the busy man of today; but what will you, O busy and self confident one, do with this command? "Acknowledge Him in all thy ways, * * * lean not unto thine own understanding." Prov. iii, 5, 6.

Reserve Force of Middle Age.

We—at least persons who have passed middle age—have only a certain amount of reserve force, and all that we draw upon in hurries is abstracted from that which should be distributed through the remainder of life. The secret of longevity is probably skill in so economizing the reserve of vital energy as to make it last out an unusual period. Persons who begin unusual exercise in youth may adapt their constitutions to the habit, and may thereby hold on to their full term of life; but this cannot be done safely if one waits till mature age before beginning.—Public Opinion.

An ingenious New York truck driver has taught his terrier to ride horseback, in order to guard the team and prevent any familiarities with the horses. A piece of carpet is thrown over the horse's back, so that the small dog may secure better footing, and the rider balances himself well and seems to enjoy his ride.

LENAWEE COUNTY PIONEERS.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE COUNTY SOCIETY HELD AT MADISON GRANGE HALL.

A Good Turnout, a Fine Program, and a Bountiful Dinner. Election of Officers for the Ensuing Year.

The regular annual session of the Lenawee County Pioneer Society was held at Madison Grange Hall on the 15th inst. As the weather was threatening all the forenoon people were somewhat late in arriving. But a goodly number had assembled by noon, and the ladies of the neighborhood had spread a bountiful lunch in the lower hall of the Grange building to which a good crowd did ample justice.

At 1 o'clock the company assembled in the upper hall, which was filled to overflowing. President F. A. Dewey called the assemblage to order, and the program was presented in the following order:

Praver was offered by Robert Wooden, of Cambridge.

Mrs. W. M. Beals delivered an address of welcome, and Hon. Thos. F. Moore made a brief but very appropriate response.

Next followed a piece of vocal music by the choir and the president read the by laws, after which several new members were enrolled.

Frank Woolsey and Mrs. Carpenter gave a fine vocal duet.

The president then read his annual address, which was filled with statistics about old times. We shall publish it next week.

Miss Mary C. Ada gave a recitation entitled The Ruined Old School House which was admirably rendered.

C. R. Porter, of Madison, then read a carefully prepared address on the early history of that town, which is given in full below.

Five-minute speeches followed by John I. Knapp, C. E. Merkley, Aunt Katie Brown and others.

The Fruit Ridge tree Club sang several pieces, which were heartily applauded.

A committee of four was appointed early in the session to report nominations for officers. This committee submitted the following report, which was duly ratified by the meeting:

President—F. A. Dewey.
Vice-president—Thos. F. Moore.
Secretary—S. C. Stacy.
Treasurer—Rufus Baker.
Executive Committee—B. L. Hicks of Ogden, N. Shumway of Fairfield, D. D. Suncoir of Adrian, Cornelius Knapp of Rome, George Howell of Tecumseh.

A resolution was passed thanking the Madison Grange for the use of their hall and the friends in the vicinity for their generous hospitality. The session lasted over three hours and was full of interest throughout. Take it all in all it was the most successful annual meeting the society has had in recent years.

I was requested to write a short sketch of the origin of settlement in the county of Lenawee, and of the town of Madison. The history of this county and its early settlement in the towns of Tecumseh, Ridgeway, Adrian and Deerfield has been so well written by pioneers during the last twenty years that it is for me to say anything new. I may, however, be able to add by way of [illegible] which may be considered rather dry. I shall therefore say more of the second than of the past.

Lenawee county was laid out by Legislative enactment to Monroe county for municipal and judicial purposes in 1822. It was organized, being the seventh county organized in the state. Wayne county and organized for the same purpose. Wayne county was organized in 1817. Wayne, Monroe, Michigan, Brown, Mackinaw, Chippewa and Michilimackinac were the counties organized in the territory of Michigan prior to 1822. Lenawee county was bounded on the south by the state line, on the east by Monroe county, on the north by Washtenaw county, and on the west by Hillsdale county. It was about twenty miles long and from eleven to fifteen miles wide. It contained about 300 square miles, or about 192,000 acres. The surface was undulating, with a rich soil, well watered and timbered. The county was well adapted to agriculture, and was one of the best counties in the territory. At the time of its organization it was one of the largest counties in the territory. The act of organization then says: "A large county in this Territory to which the Indian title was extinguished at the treaty of Chicago shall be attached to and compose the county of Lenawee." How much territory was ceded by that treaty I am unable to say, but subsequent events show that it extended on the west to Lake Michigan.

In 1829 Hillsdale county was laid out and attached to Lenawee county for municipal and judicial purposes, and in 1835 was organized. St. Joseph county was organized in 1829 and was taken from Lenawee county. Kalamazoo county was laid out in 1829 and was taken from St. Joseph county. Kent county was laid out in 1831 and was taken from Kalamazoo. So that Kent was taken from Kalamazoo, Kalamazoo from St. Joseph and St. [illegible] was taken from Lenawee in 1829, and Berrien from Lenawee in 1829 and attached to Cass, and Branch county the same year was attached to St. Joseph.

The population of Lenawee county in 1885 was 19,221, being the fifth in the state in population. Leaving out the incorporated cities, Kent and Wayne are the only counties that exceed this county. That makes it evident that in rural population this county stands third. The total valuation of the real and personal estate, as equalized by the state board, is $27,500,000. That is exceeded only by two counties, Wayne and Kent. The number of scholars attending the public schools of this county are 10,969. That is exceeded by only three counties in the state, Kent, Saginaw and Wayne. The number of school houses is 211; that is exceeded by only two counties, Kent and Oakland. The value of the public school property is $385,893; that is exceeded by six counties, Kent, Calhoun, Jackson, Saginaw, Washtenaw and Wayne.

Although this county does not stand first with any of the statistics I have mentioned, it makes a fair record, but the crowning star in her wreath of laurel is the fact that according to the census of 1880 its agricultural products exceeded that of any county in the United States. If I remember aright, by the census of 1870 the town of Raisin exceeded that of any town in the United States. There was a town of Tanton in Massachusetts that a great many years ago was chiefly a fishing town. During the fishing season they were comfortable livers, but out of the fishing season poverty reigned supreme. It was said that you meet a man from that town away from home, and ask him where he was from. If it was out of fishing season he would say in a pitious tone, "From Tanton, my lord," but if it was in fishing season and the catch was good, he would say, "From Tanton, g——d——n you." A resident of this county, if away from home and asked where he resides, can proudly say, "I am from old Lenawee county, the banner agricultural county in the United States."

I was asked to give some incidents of pioneer life. Being but nine years of age when I came to Michigan I failed to realize the privations, hardships and adventures as much as some older ones. Incidents of pioneer life to have an effect want to be spoken, instead of being read, and as there are plenty here who will be more entertaining than myself, I will mention only one circumstance connected with pioneer life. Were I away from home and asked where Madison Grange Hall is situated, I should say three miles south and two miles west from the city of Adrian. Fifty-five years ago had Wanton Graham, the man who then owned the land on which this hall stands, been asked the question where he resided, his answer would have been, on the e½ of ne¼ of sec. 29, town 7, s range 3 east. In an early day people from Hudson and Medina and some from Ohio, in going to and from Adrian would stay over night with my father occasionally, and when asked their residence their answer would invariably be given by a description of their land. One reason for that was they had no conception of distance by the road traveled. Many times they had to travel two miles to get one. Some of the first settlers in this neighborhood, to get from Adrian here with a team, had to go a mile and a half south of here. Another reason was they had no starting point to reckon distance from. They got it not say, I live so many miles south of such a school house, so many miles north of such a church. Neither could they say, such a town meets on the corner of my farm. They had to depend altogether on distances and descriptions up in the government surveys. You are well aware, many of you, that in the survey of this state a meridian line was run through this state north and south, and a base line east and west. It was then surveyed into townships of six miles square, containing thirty-six sections. The lines were marked instead of being named, the north number from was where these two lines intersected each other. The first six north and east side was 1 south and 1 east, 1 south and 2 east, and so on through the alphabet to wit, 2 south and 1 east, 2 south and 2 east, and so on. From the other three corners they started the same way, only they reversed the direction. The towns were then surveyed into sections one mile square with marked trees along the line around each section. A stake was set in the center of each section and a tree was set at each proper distance on the various lines. A surveyor was able to locate himself and point of compass by this tree, but [illegible] stakes. This was done in the west by [illegible] of the stakes. ECLIPSED IN THE FIRST INNINGS.

"Naw, you had'nt ought to kick, wats the matter with you; the visiting club always have the choice of umpires," said Craft, the catcher for the Eclipse club, last Friday, just before the game was called."

"Look at the crowd in the grand stand, that's wat'll back the home club. Give us a show."

Mr. Craft addressed these remarks to several of the members of the home nine when they spoke of having someone from Tecumseh umpire. He was too muddled to pay ball and was anxious to do the umpiring himself, which he did and the crowd had several occasions to "back up the home team," and they did it in a vigorous manner in some cases.

The game proved to be an interesting one throughout and enjoyed by the largest crowd of the season. Tecumseh never played better in the field and only two errors were made. They put in Donavin and Thomas of Elkhart as the battery. These gentlemen have made a great record in the Indiana state league, having lost only one game beside this, during the summer. Thomas was pounded all over the field the first innings, the Detroits making four base hits and running in five scores, but during the remainder of the game he was evidently warmed up, and only three more found him for a safe hit. Donavin's catching was greatly admired, and his throwing to first and second was perfect. He caught several of the boys napping on first, and Chapman had two put outs at second.

The Eclipse club is a good club for amateur and have won eight games on their trip. They put Marker in the box and the Tecumseh's had no difficulty in hitting him. Donavin made a two bagger and Ed. Palmer a three bagger, in the sixth innings, and four scores were run in. Seeing he was getting hit pretty hard, Marker called time and changed catchers, allowing himself to rest up.

Tecumseh went to bat first and scored on a wild throw by Stork. The Eclipse came in and Cross took first on balls, J. McMahon hit to rightfield and sent Cross home, Adams sent McMahon home and D. McMahon sent Adams home and he was sent in by Walker. Lanhoff took first on balls. Stork fifted a fly over in left which enabled Walker to score. Marker flew out to left, Lanhoff put out at third and Stork at second which made the score five to one. The Eclipse scored twice in the fifth and Tecumseh four times in the sixth. Donavin let out with a two bagger, and A. Palmer struck to third sending home Thomas struck to left, Freeman struck to second and brought in Palmer. Ed Palmer has made the prettiest hit of the game, sending the ball over the left fielder and bringing in Freeman and Thomas, and himself made third base. Anderson and Chapman struck out. One more run was made in the sixth by Keyser, bringing the score up to 6 in Detroit's favor. Score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

The Ridgeway Clinton game on the Tecumseh grounds last Thursday, resulted in a victory for the former. The umpiring was done by a young man from Adrian, and his decisions showed that his knowledge of the game was still in its infancy.

The score for the game in the morning between the Manchester's second nine and Tecumseh second was 14 to 10 in favor of the home club.

EDITOR HERALD.—As the time is approaching for the Annual School Meeting, I hope many of the ladies of Tecumseh will attend, and those having a vote will avail themselves of the privilege. All women paying taxes can vote on any question and those having children of school age, on all questions except those relating to taxation. Two ladies are on the Adrian School Board, and in many towns in the State the women attend these meetings. I think it has nothing to do with the subject of "womans rights," should any object on that ground, for surely Mother's are quite as likely to be interested in the education of their children as some of the men now voting, many of whom go to vote down even necessary expenditures or pay off a grudge against a member of the Board. MUSIC IN THE AIR.

THE BIG BAND TOURNAMENT HELD IN TECUMSEH ON THURSDAY LAST.

An Immense Crowd in Attendance.—Chicago St Beautifully Decorated.—A Bountiful Banquet at the Rink.—Scenes and Incidents of the Celebration.

The Band Tournament has come and gone, and it is no exaggeration to say that it was one of the most successful celebrations ever held in Tecumseh. The results more than fulfilled the most sanguine expectations of those having the matter in charge, and the crowd that witnessed the afternoon parade has never been exceeded in Tecumseh since the days of the war.

On Wednesday evening the bands from Bellevue and Clyde, Ohio, arrived and were taken in charge by the home band. Our citizens were favored with some fine street music by these organizations during the evening.

Thursday morning opened bright and pleasant, although somewhat windy, and soon after breakfast the town was stirring in a lively manner. The early train from Jackson brought the Manchester and Napoleon bands and a big crowd. The forenoon train from the west brought the Wheatland band with a crowd. At 10 o'clock an excursion train arrived from Monroe with two bands and four coaches filled with passengers. The noon trains on both roads brought heavy contingents and more bands, and the Saline band came overland. Each band played one piece on arrival and was then escorted to the band room.

CHICAGO STREET LOOKING EAST.

THE BANQUET.

Promptly at noon the call was made to the rink, where the ladies of Tecumseh had prepared a bountiful banquet. To call it "bountiful" but faintly expresses the fact. Six tables were spread with forty covers to each, which were loaded with both substantials and delicacies in endless variety. The tables presented a beautiful show just before the company made their onslaught upon them. Donations of provisions arrived all the forenoon and the supply was ample for all. The tables were filled twice at noon and once more at supper time and still the cards were not exhausted. The committee of matrons in charge of the banquet and the arrangements perfect, and the young ladies who officed as waiters were noticing but their efforts to please everyone. The guests were amply provided for and were pleased to the core of enjoyment for those who served and served the banquet. This part of the day's program was a grand success. At the close of the supper Mr. Gates spoke and proposed three cheers for the female caterers, and they were given in a manner that made the old city ring.

THE PARADE.

At half-past one the bands formed in line on Chicago street, and led by the marshals and the city band began the parade. The line of march taken was the same as published in last week's HERALD. The streets along the route were all lined with people, and a constant chorus of brass music filled the air. Upon returning to the central stand the bands reformed in one solid phalanx, and playing in unison they marched west on Chicago street to Union, thence south to Pottawatamie, thence east to Railroad, thence north to the grand stand.—This was certainly the finest street parade ever witnessed in Tecumseh. Upon arriving at the central stand Capt. Wood, the president of the day, welcomed the bands in a neat little speech. They then executed several pieces in unison, under the direction of Profs Boehme and Skinner.

They then separated, filled the five stands on Chicago street and played [illegible]

A. Boehme; asst. of Monroe; and assistant musical director, C. F. Skinner, of Tecumseh. The next meeting will be held at Monroe, Aug. 20, 1889.

THE DECORATIONS.

The decorations on Chicago street capped the climax. On the four corners of Chicago and Railroad streets four poles were erected, and another taller pole in the center of the area. Around the center pole the central stand was erected. Festoons of bunting connected the different corner poles with the central one. Five stands were erected on Chicago street, all of which were trimmed with evergreens and bunting. Every block on the street was trimmed with flags and bunting and the opera house was beautifully ornamented. The reporter's pencil alone cannot adequately describe the beautiful appearance of Chicago street on that day, and the artist's sketch presented does not overpaint the scene in the least.

THE CONCERT.

The concert at the opera house in the evening was well attended, being participated in by the Monroe and Tecumseh city bands, and the net proceeds realized reached nearly $20.

The visiting bands all spoke in terms of praise of their reception, and many

The visiting bands all spoke in terms of praise of their reception, and many of the leaders personally called at our office and requested us in their behalf to extend thanks to our citizens for their hospitality.

Refreshment stands were erected in every available place about the village and all did a thriving business. Over 150 gallons of ice cream were sold at the different places where it was on sale. The tent managed by the Baptist ladies netted over $20.

Among those present the Monroe City band was accorded the first place by common consent, and next came our own Tecumseh band. Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is to use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. An Ocean Tragedy.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIVE VICTIMS

Of a Collision Between Two Steamers—Roused from Sleep to Face Grim Death.

Fearful Panic Among the Doomed Passengers—A Wild Rush to the Deck and the Boats.

Vain Efforts of the Officers to Save Life—No Time for Anything—Very Few Saved—The Thingvalla Badly Stove—She Sends Her Human Freight on by the Wieland—Accounts from the Survivors—The Lost Nearly All from the Northwest—Lists of the Unfortunates.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—The steamship Geiser, of the Thingvalla line, which left New York Saturday, August 11, for Stettin, was run into off Cape Race Tuesday by the steamship Thingvalla, of the same line. Her side was stove in and she sank rapidly. The panic-stricken people were got into boats as rapidly as possible, the Thingvalla's boats being also used in the work of rescue. The Geiser sank so fast, however, that before the boats returned from the Thingvalla after their first trip, the disabled steamer had gone down, leaving scores of people struggling in the water. Many of these were picked up, but when the roll was called on board the Thingvalla it was found that eighty passengers and thirty-three of the crew of the Geiser were missing.

The Hamburg line steamship Wieland, which was in the vicinity, came up in time to assist in the work of rescuing, and she took the passengers from the Thingvalla, the latter proceeding in a damaged condition for Halifax, while the Wieland proceeded to New York, arriving at quarantine late yesterday afternoon.

The collision occurred off Sable Island. The Geiser sank in five minutes. The Thingvalla's passengers, 455 in number, were transferred to the Wieland and brought here with the fourteen of the passengers and seventeen of the crew of the Geiser. All the others on the Geiser, eighty passengers and thirty-three of the crew, were drowned. The Thingvalla is trying to reach Halifax. The exact extent of her injuries are unknown. The Thingvalla left Stettin July 26, and Copenhagen Aug. 4 for New York. She is commanded by Capt. Laub. She is 1,841 tons register. The Geiser was of 1,871 tons.

The collision occurred about 4 o'clock Tuesday morning. First Mate Henry Brown had been in charge, the captain having retired at 11 p. m., the night being perfectly clear and no danger apprehended. About 4 o'clock Capt. Moller was awakened by a call from the chief officer on the bridge, who said there was danger of a collision. A moment later there was a shrill blowing of whistles, which awakened the passengers, but before they could get on deck or seize life-preservers there was a terrible shock, and the vessel's side was crushed in. Some of the water-tight compartments were broken into, and the ship began at once to sink. Those on board were thrown into confusion and panic. A rush was made for the boats.

Capt. Moller had rushed to the bridge clothed only in his night dress. He says he heard two whistles, meaning that his steamer would keep on her course. He recognized the Thingvalla approaching amidships on the starboard side. The Geiser's engines were reversed, and she was backing water. The same was being done by the Thingvalla, but both steamers were under too heavy a headway to avert the catastrophe. Capt. Moller continues:

"The passengers had now been awakened, and were scrambling over each other in wild confusion, in an effort to reach the upper decks. They forgot the first rule on board ship in case of accident, to seize life preservers. I called to them to do so, but they paid no heed. I gave orders to man the boats, and the small boat astern was lowered, but the settling [illegible] boat. In less than two minutes from the time I reached the bridge we were struck, and within the same length of time thereafter the vessel was under water. I had hardly given orders to man the life and small boats when I was swept from the bridge. The panic-stricken passengers made a jump for the few boats that were launched, and the boats were immediately capsized. As soon as I came to the surface I began to swim. I saw nothing in the darkness but the masts of the ship, but I heard the awful cries of those who were struggling in the water or sinking to death. I suppose I had been in the water five minutes when I came near a rowboat from the Thingvalla and was picked up. The officers and crew of the Thingvalla did everything that human beings could do to save the lives of those who went down with the Geiser."

Other accounts corroborate the captain's statement as to the panic of the passengers and the swamping of the boats. The passengers were mostly farmers from the northwest, who had by years of industry and economy accumulated a competence, and were going on a visit to their native land. Many were especially attracted thither at this time by the great exposition at Copenhagen. Those that were saved lost all their effects, and even all their clothing except their nightwear.

Anders Wilse, of Minneapolis, one of those saved, says that, being used to early rising, he was awake when the crash came, about 4 o'clock. He heard the cries of the officers and crew, and the orders for all to come on deck. He rushed up and tried to cut loose one of the lifeboats, but could not do so. The steamer sank with terrible rapidity. He was taken down in the whirlpool. When he came up he was under an overturned lifeboat. He swam around until he was picked up.

Ole Jansen, of St. Paul, Minn., says that when he heard the ships crash together he seized a life preserver and rushed on deck. He cut one of the Geiser's boats loose, but it stuck to the steamer until she sank. The life-boat was then freed, but turned over before it reached the water. He got on the upturned boat and was saved by the boatswain's crew from the Thingvalla.

The most miraculous escape of all was that of the second mate, Mr. Jorgensen. He was in his bunk when the collision occurred. The black nose of the Thingvalla scraped by his bunk and pushing against the door of his cabin held it closed. The anchor chain of the Thingvalla was hanging almost within his reach. He sprang for it and grasping it went up hand over-hand to the Thingvalla.

The correct statement of the number of lives lost was announced by the agents here Friday to be 105. The Geiser had ninety-three passengers and forty-three of a crew. Fourteen passengers and seventeen of the crew were saved. Seventy-nine passengers and twenty-six of the crew were drowned. Fortunately no lives were lost from the Thingvalla. Very few of those lost belonged in this city or vicinity; nearly all the passengers were from the west. Forty-two tickets were issued by A. Mortensen & Co., agents at Chicago, and the holders of six of these were saved. Fifteen tickets were issued by A. E. Johnson & Co., agents at St. Paul, Minn., of whom three were saved. Two were issued by Even A. Hansa, agent at Worcester, Mass., both of whom were lost. One was issued by E. Wennstrom, agent at Philadelphia, and he was saved—Jens Andersen. Thirty-three tickets were issued at the New York office of whom three were saved.

THE THINGVALLA IN PORT.

She Arrives at Halifax Badly Damaged—Capt. Laub's Statement.

BOSTON, Aug. 17.—The steamship Thingvalla arrived at Halifax Friday morning, badly damaged.

Capt. Laub makes the following statement: "I was in bed on the morning of the 14th. The second officer relieved the first officer on the bridge at 4 o'clock in the morning. About 4:30 I was awakened by hearing the second officer shout out: 'Port helm!' A moment later the telegraph bell rang to reverse engines. I jumped out of bed and rushed on deck in my night clothes. Just as I arrived on deck there was a tremendous crash. We had collided with a large steamer, and struck her amidships, just below the mainmast. For a moment all was confusion and there were loud shrieks from the people on both ships. I immediately ran aft and ordered my crew to prepare boats for launching. By the time I had returned to the bridge we had disentangled ourselves from the strange ship. I found on the bridge the second officer of the vessel we had collided with. From him I learned she was our sister ship, the Geiser, Capt. Moller. The Thingvalla had cut into the Geiser clean to the main stateroom. My first duty was to look after my ship and quiet my passengers. This I did. Daylight was just breaking, and there was no fog, but it was hazy and there was a slight shower of rain."

GRAPE JUICE FOR SICKNESS:

The art of cultivating the Oporto vines and fermenting the Oporto Grape into wine in this country, and of preserving the Grape Juice fresh without fermentation has been brought to a greater degree of perfection by Mr. Alfred Speer, of Passaic, N. J., than by any other person: in fact, he was the pioneer in introducing and advertising Native Wines. He has purchased hundreds of tons of grapes, besides his own vintage. Mr. Speer's success has arisen from the strict purity and valuable properties of his wines for invalids and feeble persons, and his reputation extends around the world.

The HERALD and Courier-Journal will be sent to Jan. 1, '89 for one dollar.

LOG CABINS were, in the Harrison-Tippecanoe campaign of 1840 erected in the large cities and villages, and used for holding political meetings. Barrels of hard cider were placed in front of the cabins, and the "Log Cabin hard-cider campaign of '40" has passed into history as the most enthusiastic of our political contests. Log Cabins have for this reason a permanent place in American history. Warner's Log Cabin Remedies and "Tippecanoe" tonic bitters have secured a permanent place because of their excellence.

Happiness is only relative, and some people find that it is a very distant relative indeed.

In connection with the fact that Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic has had the largest sale, it has been the most successful remedy ever before the public for all blood troubles and diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Fifty cents buys a bottle of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. Mrs. Emma Brown, Lima, Ohio, says four bottles of Jones' Red Clover Tonic has cured me of sick headache that I have been subject to for over nine years.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Jones Red Clover Tonic is the most successful blood purifier ever put on the market. Its wonderful cures in all stomach, kidney and liver troubles has brought out many imitations. It restores debilitated nerve tissues, restoring the force lost by sickness, mental work or excessive use of liquor, opium and tobacco. Dr. Geo. Ferguson, will supply the genuine at 50 cents a bottle.

A false chord of music is a discord. A false cord of wood is about seven-eights.

I have been afflicted with catarrh for 20 years. It became chronic, and there was a constant dropping of mucus matter. It extended to my throat, causing me very great difficulty in speaking, indeed for years I was not able to speak more than thirty minutes, and often this with great difficulty. I also, to a great extent, lost the sense of hearing in the left ear, and of taste. By the use of Ely's Cream Balm all dropping of mucous has ceased and my voice and hearing has greatly improved.—Jas. W. Davidson, Attorney at Law, Monmouth, Ill.

Smyptoms of Heart Disease

Diseased hearts are as common as diseased lungs, kidneys or stomach, but far less understood. The symptoms are shortness of breath, when weepings, etc., oppression in the chest, faint, weak or hungry spells, dreaming, pain or tenderness in the side, swelling feet, dropsy, etc. The unnatural circulation of the blood in the lungs, stomach, kidneys, liver and brain causes other symptoms. The only reliable remedy for the heart yet discovered, is Dr. Mile's New Cure. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Baker & Hall.

A SPORTIVE MAIDEN.

Her Graceful Frolics at the Seaside.

An afternoon at Rockaway revealed fresh possibilities of the summer girl. She was idly pouring sand from one hand to another, lying in a burrow on the beach under the shelter of a parasol overgrown with ribbons. She wore a gown of some soft, thin, silky, white stuff, tied at the waist with a yellow girdle. On either side was a young man in knickerbockers and blazer. A third young man lay at her feet.

The frolicsome girl was content, but the young men were inclined to wish each that the others were not there. One of them snipped a bunch of ribbons from the fluttering parasol, and bickering over the possession of the trophy assumed the small animation possible on a lazy August afternoon.

Snatching suddenly her ribbons from the last possessor's hand the summer girl pinned them to her cap and jumped to her feet. "Catching's havings," she laughed down at her recumbent admirers and ran for the water. They were after her in an instant, but before they wet their feet in the edge of the first wave she was well out beyond the line of breakers swimming with a splendid vigorous stroke. It was impossible to refuse such a challenge, and in they plunged, blazers, Knickerbockers and all.

She turned her head to look at her pursuers, and the bright ribbons nodded them a saucy defiance from her head. On she went, swiftly and powerfully, and after her plunged the three young men. Two of them proved on the instant that they were no match for the girl. A stern chase was too long a chase for them, and they emerged on the beach, dripping objects in yellow and white stripes, disconsolate blazers.

The third swimmer gained on the girl. She was agile in eluding him in the water, turning this way and that and leading him a merry chase, but a reach of a long arm finally captured the ribbons, and they swam back together to shore. The summer girl's white gown shed the water like a duck's feather; she was prettier than ever with the salt water curling her hair in little rings. She ran up and down the beach once or twice, shook herself out and smiled on the young men. Two of them were starting for dry clothes, but the third sat down in the sand with the summer girl again under the beribboned parasol.

A Horrible Inheritance.

The transmission of the fearful effects of contagious blood poison is the most horrible inheritance which any man can leave to his innocent posterity; but it can be certainly mitigated and in the majority of cases, prevented by the use of the antidote which Nature furnishes, and which is found in the remedy known all over the world as Swift's Specific—commonly called "S. S. S."

Mr. J. H. Brown, of Hornellsville, N. Y., writes: "Three years I suffered with this horrible disease. Swift's Specific cured me completely."

Prof. Edwin Paar, 234 E. 22nd st., N. Y., writes: "Swift's Specific cured me of a fearful case of Blood Poison."

Dr. B. F. Wingfield, of the Soldier's Home, Richmond, Va., writes: "Swift's Specific cured me of a severe case of Blood Poison."

D. W. K. Briggs, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I was a perfect wreck from Blood Poison. Swift's Specific restored health and hope, and I am well to-day."

C. W. Langhill, Savannah, Ga.: "I suffered long with Blood Poison. I tried Swift's Specific and am perfectly well."

A. W. Buell, of Power's Hotel, Rochester, N. Y., writes: "It is the best blood remedy on earth. I cured myself with it. I recommended it to a friend and it made him well."

Mr. F. L. Stanton, of the Smithville, Ga. News, writes that a friend was afflicted with a case of Blood Poison, and two bottles of S. S. S. effected a complete cure.

Professional Ignorance

Nothing is more common, nor less true, than for physicians to tell patients in the first stages of heart disease that the trouble is only nervous, etc., and of no account. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing as shown by the great number of people who die of heart disease when its existence is not expected. Take warning. Don't neglect the first symptoms, and if you would avoid sudden death, angina pectoris, etc., take Dr. Miles' New Cure before it is to late. Sold at Baker & Hall's drug store.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. Asa B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00

TWO MINUTES OF STORM AT MARQUETTE, MICH.

A High-Flying Cyclone, but Low Enough to Work Great Damage—New Orleans Cut Off from the Outer World and Left in Darkness—Heavy Loss of Property—The Rye Crop Badly Injured.

MARQUETTE, Mich., Aug. 21.—In this lilliputian city the people have long felt safe from the visitation of cyclones, but yesterday they were called upon to witness an exhibition that has hitherto existed only in their minds. At 2 p. m. a black cloud came up from the west and passed rapidly over the city. The rain fell in torrents. Immediately thereafter the sun came out bright, and it was exceedingly hot, with not a breath of air stirring. Fifteen minutes later the people, as if by a common presentiment of impending danger, began to hurriedly seek shelter. At 2:20 another cloud, larger and darker, appeared at the hilltops west of town. It had the appearance of a huge bird, whose long, black, fan-shaped wings were revolving rapidly around a cone-shaped body. As it came over the hills it rose to a great height, and the anxious watchers believed it would pass over. A whistling moan was heard as it drew nearer at the rate of sixty miles an hour. When directly over the very center of the business portion of the city it suddenly dipped, and the mischief began. It struck the pavement amid the most substantial stone and brick buildings of the city, and after vainly attempting to scatter them to pieces it whirled north, one block up Front street, lifted and passed out over the bay.

Less than two minutes were consumed by the cyclone, but the damage wrought in that time is estimated by conservative men to reach at least $10,000. The tin roofing on the business blocks afforded ample opportunity for the wind to create hasty havoc. Hundreds of square feet of tin roofs were rolled into great heaps, and either carried away bodily, thrown on to the roofs opposite buildings, or deposited in shapeless masses in the streets. Bricks from demolished chimneys and the combings of business blocks, telephone and telegraph wires were thrown in a complete network, and mixing with the debris in the street rendered them impassable for some time. Horses broke away and ran in terror before the storm, huge trees were uprooted and many glass windows demolished.

Rain meanwhile poured in the streets, and hail fell in sheets. As the storm cloud passed off to what the lake there was great fear for the lake craft, but it only proved to the northwest, [illegible] a seething cauldron of white [illegible] and disappeared in the forest beyond. The damage in the harbor was but [illegible] the marine disasters are [illegible]. There was much anxiety felt [illegible] along the [illegible] and [illegible] was [illegible] by the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] was [illegible] from [illegible] by [illegible] and [illegible] them.

Moon rushed to where Jennie lay, picked up the revolver, kissed her, then placed the revolver to his right temple and blew his brains out. Moon had lately returned from Colorado and it is supposed that he killed the girl because she was seen to be married to another man and refused his suit. When the bodies were found by the neighbors they were lying side by side with the revolver between them.

Remarks by Dr. McGlynn.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.—In a speech Saturday night, at the Anti-Poverty picnic at Jones' woods, Dr. McGlynn said: "I do not desire to be buried in Calvary cemetery, where there are hundreds of thousands of women who have led lives of infamy, drunkards, of people who have died in debauchery, drunkenness, and sin. I think, my friends, we can make merry over not being allowed to rest in Calvary. Nor am I particularly anxious that my bones should rest in the earth at all. They may find a burial place in the stomach of a shark in the bottom of the ocean for aught I care. I had rather be buried where I have said than beside an archbishop under the high altar of St. Patrick's cathedral."

Three Incendiary Fires.

PONTIAC, Ills., Aug. 20.—Three incendiary fires were started in this city early Sunday morning within an hour. Mrs. Brown Discharged.

MASON CITY, Iowa, Aug. 20.—Mrs. H. E. Brown, who has been on trial here charged with poisoning the Brown family, was discharged Saturday. The judge said the testimony went to show that Mrs. Brown was afflicted as the others at the time of the poisoning. It is not reasonable to believe that she, having all to gain by the death of her husband, would also try to poison herself out of the way. No motive was shown why she should poison her own children, even though the [illegible] was ever so strong to [illegible].

ALBION COLLEGE YEAR BOOK FREE [illegible]

"A Great Newspaper."

Under the above caption the New York Graphic, some years ago, published a critical review of the growth of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS, which sets forth so clearly some of the fundamental principles underlying the development of one of the phenomenal successes of the present date, supplemental statements are parenthetically added by the present writer.

"THE newspaper entitled to the distinction of having the largest daily circulation in America is THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. (Since this statement was made it is possible that the growth of the New York World entitles it to first place.) The Graphic to-day devotes a page to sketches of scenes in and about its establishment. The history of this paper is probably without a parallel in the annals of American journalism. It was founded December 20th, 1875, and was the first low-priced daily successfully established in the West. At the end of its first year it had achieved a circulation of about 10,000. From that time on its growth has been remarkable. It now prints seven editions daily, comprising both morning and evening issues. Its statement of circulation for the year 1884 shows a daily average of 125,178 copies, unquestionably the largest daily circulation on the American continent. (The sworn statement for 1887 shows a daily average of 165,376.)

"In politics THE DAILY NEWS is always independent, never neutral. While its editoral expression is sometimes vigorous to the degree of severity, there is always in its utterances of opinion so manifest a purpose to be impartial and fair to all opposing interests, that it rarely loses the confidence of the reader, however much it may fail to bring him to an acceptance of its own view concerning the matter in hand.

"As a newspaper proper, THE DAILY NEWS has earned a reputation for enterprising news-gathering second to none in the United States. It is the only cheap paper in the West that is a member of the Associated Press. It gives its readers all the news worth giving and gives it for two cents. (Now it does it for one cent a day.)

"Aside from its own deserving merits as a complete and cheap newspaper, it is doubtless much indebted for its remarkable growth in circulation to the persistent adherence on the part of the other Chicago dailies to the "blanket-sheet" style of journalism. Of all the people in America the average Chicagoan is most in a hurry and least inclined to wade through columns of verbiage and stuff. THE DAILY NEWS is the only Chicago daily that has the facilities for giving all the news, and at the same time the good sense to present it in concise form. The result of such a condition of affairs is that THE DAILY NEWS prints more papers than all the other Chicago dailies combined.

"In considering all the causes which have entered into and produced so phenomenal a journalistic growth the most important one unquestionably has been the controlling conviction of its managers that the "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and heathful as its best and highest priced cotemporary. All this the "cheap paper" may easily be even at its reduced price.

"The difference of revenue between the two-cent paper (even more so when the price is one cent), and the higher-priced "blanket-sheet," the latter throws away in useless and unasked for size, that not only is of no worth to the reader, but is even an annoyance, in that it compels him to gleam what is of real news interest from a mass of verbiage and worthless amplication.

"It is because its managers have been wise enough to practically recognize these essential elements of the best American journalism of to-day that THE DAILY NEWS is the best and most popular general family newspaper published in Chicago or the West."

It seems hardly possible that an endorsement of merit could be framed in stronger terms than the foregoing analysis, and yet how much greater is not the achievement now that such a journal as THE DAILY NEWS is placed in every man's hands at the reduced price of ONE CENT A DAY.

The truly marvelous enterprise of American journalism can hardly go farther. Certain it is that THE DAILY NEWS leads the van.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is sold by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or it will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The attention of farmers is especially called to the fact that this metropolitan daily now costs but little more than the old time weekly. The shrewd farmer will now have his daily market reports. Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.
The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, newsy and piquant, bristling with telling points, brief, clear, sprightly, candid, earnest, convincing, fair, dispassionate, full of ringing facts and bright with sterling truths.
It popularizes the burning question of "Prohibition," brings it down to every mind and conscience, marshals its many startling facts in new and surprising forms, clarifies and invigorates its logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whate'er it touches. Cloth $1.00. We promised Mrs. Beckley some time ago to make a statement through the HERALD as to the nature of the disease which caused the death of her husband Mr. John Beckley. Dr. Loree, who attended Mr. Beckley, and Dr. North, who was consulted in the case, held an autopsy together over the remains and found an organic disease which does not often occur, and which they named, Stricture of the Colon, or in plain English, a closing up of the passage of the large intestine.

The Prohibition club will meet in Exelby's hall on Saturday evening of this week, and will be addressed by D. W. Grandon of the Lance. Every Prohibitionist is urged to be present, as delegates will be elected to attend the county convention, which meets at Adrian Sept. 4th, at 11 o'clock a. m. Mr. Grandon is worthy of a good hearing, and it is to be hoped that all, no matter what may be their party preference, will attend and hear the issues of the day presented from the standpoint of a new party. The South Raisin Glee Club will be present and will furnish some of their campaign songs, which have given the quartette much recent notoriety.

But few people have an idea how large an industry is represented by what may collectively be termed the "rag business."

Belated citizens returning to their homes with the dawn and flimsy excuses for their waiting wives cannot fail to notice the swarm of men, women and children that dives in and out of obscure places, seizing with wolfish avidity on all sorts of scrap, such as paper, iron and cigar stumps. Those go into an immense sack carried on the back, and by the hour of seven the collectors may be seen at the door of the ragman's den, bargaining for the sale of their wares.

To a junk dealer almost anything is welcome; he asks no questions. Lead pipe from a vacant house, brass castings from a foundry, patterns in copper, pieces of lightning rods, old iron of any description, paper in all forms, from a family Bible to the ephemeral daily journals of events, go on the scales and are subjected to the relentless appraisement of so much per pound.

If the goods offered for sale were stolen it is none of his business. He asks no questions and pays cash. The paper goes to the mills, the metal to the foundries, and the dealer, in the course of time grown wealthy, abandons his calling and seeks a wider field under the sign of the three balls of Lombardy or the seductive allurement of "easy payments."

FRANKLIN FACTS.

Many of our citizens are suffering from an attack of hay fever among Walter Osborne, Will Whelan and Clarence Wisner.

Uncle William and Aunt Emily Whelan met with an accident last Saturday that come near proving fatal; they were returning home from their daughter's, Mrs. Frank Erskine, and when passing Otis Wheelan's a pea-fowl flew across the road uttering its discordant cry, a second one closely following it. The horse was off in a flash, upsetting the carriage and throwing the old people out. From appearances it is supposed they must have been dragged some distance but—most fortunately—the harness broke freeing the horse who lost no time in getting into his own stall at home a distance of nearly half a mile. Mr. Whelan was unconscious and both of them were badly bruised and jammed. This afternoon, Aug. 27th, Mr. Whelan has had a severe chill with pain in side; neither of them are able to sit up any length of time. The carriage is a complete wreck. The frisky colt that accomplished all this is only in his twenty-eighth year.

The regular monthly meeting of the Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum occured at James Allen's, Aug. 25th. A large company assembled and the evening was so warm the exercises were presented out of doors, where the balmy air, the radiant August moon, light and sweet music and song, all conduced to make the occasion a very enjoyable one. The usual exercises of the society, were supplemented by a beautiful recitation presented by Miss Wartz, of the center school. Afterward lemonade was served and an hour spent in social games and converse. The next meeting will take place at the house of S. N. Munger, the last Saturday night in Sept. when the following program will be presented:

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Is it any indication that legislation favors the rich and "upper tens" when it takes a private soldier two or three years to get a pension claim through and then receiving in many cases only $24 a year; while an officer, his widow, or near relative, is granted a pension from the word go without asking of $5,000, a year. Then again; The government is building post offices in all the large villages and cities, and paying the postmasters from $1000 to $5000 a year salary; while Lake Ridge, Macon, Ridgeway, Britton, Cone, etc., have to furnish their own offices and supplies and get from $25 to $100 a year.

We overheard two kids with white hats on, talking, both of the same party, one a carpenter, who remarked that he did'nt want any free trade in his; the other thought there was no particular danger, while neither party proposed to reduce even the surplus over one-third; and he could'nt see how free trade would hurt a carpenter by lowering the price of lumber, nails and all building material, so that the "means would equal the extremes."

When you hear congress enquiring after the welfare of the masses, and apportioning the surplus to the poor, then you can believe in the "hocus pocus slight of hand" by which a high protective tariff is made to benefit the poor laboring man and not the manufacturer and capitalist. What keeps a laboring man poor? When Congress and state legislatures, with good working majorities, pass a good strong well guarded prohibition law, you can believe there is something stronger than "sympathy in well regulated plans."

There is a way in which democrats and republicans who voted for the constitutional amendment and local option, can vote prohibition and not change the status of their idolized old party, just pair off and both vote prohibition. In that way many can vote as they pray.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Lillian E. Marks was born in Lazelle, Ill., Feb. 14th, 1854. When very young her parents moved to Detroit, and six years later to Adrian. Since the age of twelve Tecumseh has been her home. In 1874 she was married to Milliard F. Marks. Their two sons are left to comfort their father.

Mrs. Marks was bright and winning in her manner, attracting many friends. For nearly eight years she has been an invalid, and for a long time has seldom been seen away from her home except in her carriage, where she spent many happy hours, even to the last week of her life. Naturally buoyant and hopeful, her unfailing good cheer had its foundation in her sure trust in God. She early learned to love the Saviour and united with the Tecumseh Baptist Church when fourteen years old. Consumption slowly wasted her strength, wearisome hours of feebleness and great suffering were endured with fortitude and patience, but just at the last, on the morning of the 16th of August she died peacefully. It was a great gratification to her friends that her mind was clear while life lasted. When she thought she felt the approach of death her voice went up to God in prayer that she might have strength to endure her suffering and then she commended her husband, her children, her sisters and brother to God's care and asked his blessing upon them. Soon she expressed her peace with God by saying "Reconciled, Reconciled." Brave, patient, affectionate, fully appreciating the tender care given her, through all these years, by her husband and sisters, her warm interest in all affairs of life made her the chief attraction of her home. She will be sadly missed, but from her brighter home, where pain and sickness never enter, she awaits the faithful coming of those she loved. In the absence of her pastor, Rev. C. E. Conley of Detroit, her former pastor, conducted appropriate services Saturday afternoon, Aug. 18th.

BILL NYE ON THE TARIFF.

How the Farmer is Protected---The Beneficent Results to Agriculture of a High Tariff Found in a Crop of Matured Mortgages.

"What are the prospects for farmers in your State?"

"Well, they are pore. Never was so pore, in fact sence I've been there. Folks wonder why boys leave the farm. My boys left so as to get protected, they said, and so they went into a clothing store, one of 'em, and one went into a hardware and one is talkin' protection in the legislature this winter. They said that farmin' was gittin' to be like fishin' and huntin', well enough for a man that has means and leisure, but they couldn't make a livin' at it, they said. Another boy is in a drug store, and the man that hires him says he is a royal feller."

"Kind of a castor royal feller," I said, with a shriek of laughter.

He waited until I had laughed all I wanted to, and then he said:

"I've always hollered for high tariff in order to hyst the public debt, but now that we've got the national debt coopered I wish they take a little hack at mine. I've put in fifty years farmin'. I never drank licker in any form. I've worked from ten to eighteen hours a day, been economical in cloze and never went to a show more'n a dozen times in my life, raised a family and learned upward of two hundred calves to drink out of a tin pail without blowing all their vittles up my sleeve. My wife worked alongside o' me, sewin' new seats on the boys' pants, skimmin' milk and even helpin' me load hay. For thirty years we toiled along together and hardly got time to look into each other's faces or dared to stop and get acquainted with each other. Then her health failed. Ketched cold in the spring house, prob'bly skimmin' milk and washin' pans and scaldin' pails and spankin' butter. Anyhow, she took quite a long breath one day, while the doctor and me was watchin' her, and she says to me, 'Henry,' says she, 'I've got a chance to rest, and she put one tired, worn-out hand on top of the other tired, worn-out hand, and I know she had gone where they don't work all day and do chores all night.

"I took time to kiss her then. I had been too busy for a good while previous to do that, and then I called in the boys. After the funeral it was too much for them to lay around and eat the kind of cookin' we had to pay up with and nobody spoke up around the house as we used to. The boys quit whistlin' around the barn and raised cain of boys by themselves about goin' to town and gettin' drunk.

"They took a glass now and then and swore a four foot lo pfom to their grandmothers on the old farm, greatly.

Then both of us looked out of the car window quite a long while without saying anything.

"I don't blame the boys for going into something else long'r than things pays better, but I say, and I say what I know—that the man who holds the prosperity of this country in his hands is the man that actually makes money for other people to spend, the man that eats three good, simple, square meals a day and goes to bed at nine o'clock, so that future generations with good blood and cool brains can go from his farm to the Senate and Congress and the White House—he is the man that gets left at last to run his farm, with nobody to help him but a hired man and a high protective tariff. The farms in our State are mortgaged for over seven hundred million dollars. Ten of our western states—I see by the papers—has got about three billion and a half mortgages on their farms, and that don't count the chatel mortgages filed with the town clerks, on farm machinery, stock, waggins, and even crops, by gosh! that ain't two inches high under the snow. That's what the prospects is for farmers now. The government is rich, but the men that made it, the men that fought prairie fires and prairie wolves and Injins and potato bugs and blizzards, and has paid the war debt and pensions and everything and hollered for the union and the Republican party and high tariff and anything else they was told to, is left high and dry this cold winter with a mortgage of seven billions and a half on [illegible] and saved a thousand times over.

"Yes, but look at the glory of sending from the farm the future President, the future Senator and the future member of Congress.

"That looks well on paper, but what does it really amount to? Soon as a farmer gov get in a place like that he forgets the soil that produced him and holds his head as high as a hollyhock. He hollers for protection to everybody but the farmer, and while he sets around in a lightly-tightly room with a fire in it night and day, his father on the farm has to kindle his own fire in the morning with elm slivers, and he has to wear his son's lawn tennis suit next to him or freeze to death, and the old lady has to sojourn through the winter in the flannels that Sally wore at the regatter before he went to Congress.

"Sal I say, and I think that Congress agrees with me. Damn a farmer, anyhow."

He then went away.

BILL NYE.

KEYNOTE SPEECH.

Judge Thurman Opens the Democratic Campaign.

He Addresses an Immense Throng at Port Huron, Michigan.

The Present Administration Applauded as a Wise and Honest One—The Fallacies of High Tariff, and the Injustice Imposed by It Upon American Labor. Eminent Republican Authority Quoted to Emphasize His Arguments.

Judge Thurman, Democratic nominee for vice president, practically opened the Democratic campaign August 22, at Port Huron, Michigan. Mr Thurman was given enthusiastic greetings all along the line on his way from his home, at Columbus, O., to Michigan.

As Port Huron was reached the signs of a great day in the district appeared. Crowds were waving handkerchiefs and cheering lustily, residences were resplendent in bunting and flags, boats in every direction turned loose their whistles and Port Huron and pandemonium seemed one. At the landing the reception was an ovation to make any aspiring statesman proud. The crowd was a great mass of humanity, old and young were there, yelling for all they were worth. The local Democratic clubs were there in white hats and with canes, flags, whistles, the blare of bands, a big procession and tastefully decorated buildings, the scene was inspiring. Judge Thurman said:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Will you kindly allow me to keep my cap on [cries of yes, yes, certainly]. I am afraid that this cold north wind might do me some harm, if I went bareheaded, and although I am perfectly willing to uncover my head before the people, I don't want to break down at the beginning of the campaign. [Cries of good, good, keep it on, and cheers.] My friends, this is the first time in my life that I have had the honor of speaking in your state. I have been invited again and again, but I have never been able to accept any invitation before this. I esteem it a very great privilege to be able to address you today. This, because I know what an energetic, enterprising and intelligent population Michigan contains, and I know too that people are taking the greatest interest in the questions that are being discussed this year.

"In the brief time that I shall speak, I shall confine myself mainly with one of those questions. I shall do so because it is that in which the public interest is now being taken and upon which so much is being said by speakers, by writers and through the public press. It is not necessary for me before I proceed to enter upon my subject to speak of the president of the United States and his administration. He is a very few weeks [illegible] and was just as regard for the truth. He says of Grover Cleveland, he is a honest, a wise, a patriotic, President and has led the nation through four years of a clean, an upright and a wise administration. [Loud cheers.] Four years ago he was elected. In the campaign that preceded his election no opponent presented an instance of evil in case he should be elected, he did succeed and pray what has he done? This question [Laughter and applause.] Where is the ruin that was to follow the election of Grover Cleveland; where is the disgrace that was to follow his election? On the contrary the country has been more quiet, more peaceable and prosperous than it has been for many years that have gone by. Now, I know the man; I know him well, and I tell you, my fellow-citizens, that a more upright and wise man I do not believe dwells within the limits of the United States. [Loud cheers.] And he has a noble band of counsellors around him, and not the least among them is the distinguished citizen of your own state, Mr. Dickinson. [Applause.] Cleveland knows not only how to govern himself within the limits of the constitution, but he knows full well how to choose good constitutional advisers. [Cheers.]

"Having said this much about the administration, let me proceed to that question to which I alluded in opening, which is commonly called the tariff question. I presume there is not a person within the sound of my voice who does not know what is meant by the tariff, and yet it may aid us to-day if I give a clear and precise definition of what a tariff is. A tariff, my friends, is nothing in the world but a tax—a tax levied by the general government upon every article of commerce that comes into the United States and that is intended for sale within our borders, which instantly raises the price of the articles, and therefore becomes a tax or a burden upon every article of domestic manufacture of a like nature with those which pay the tariff tax. Now we have at this moment according to the last [illegible] in the National treasury called surplus revenue; that is, taxes collected from the people beyond the necessities of the government. These $115,000,000 are lying partly idle in the vaults of the treasury of the United States, of no service to any human being, drawing no interest, earning no profit, but taken from the pockets of the people to whom it belongs and where, if they were now found, thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people of the United States would put them to good use and improve their condition. [Applause.]

"The Democratic party says that this is a wrong condition of affairs—that money ought not to be like the talent of the man we are told of in the Scriptures, who buried it in the ground; that this is a very poor use to make of the money of the people, and therefore the Democratic party say that this surplus revenue which is produced in the month by this tariff tax ought to be reduced, that the tax should be reduced, so that the surplus will not continue to accumulate. Our opponents, on the other hand, say it is better to let surplus accumulate, it is better to take money from the pockets of our people—it is better to pile it up in the vaults of the treasury department, although it does no good whatever, but rather does great harm; it is better to do that than to touch the tariff laws of the country. We say on the contrary that the way to relieve the overtaxed people is to reduce the tax, that the way to treat a people honestly, fairly and [illegible] pocket than the government actually needs for expenditures [cries of good, that's right and applause.] The issue then, is clearly made up between us. It is between high taxation on the one hand and reasonable taxation on the other. It is between taking the money of the people out of their own control, out of their own pockets and burying it in the cellars of the treasury department, or leaving it where it belongs, in the pockets of the people to be used as their wants, their requirements, their intelligence and honesty directs.

The speaker was interrupted at this point by a well-meaning gentleman on the platform who suggested that, as the sun was shining in his face Judge Thurman might feel more comfortable if he stepped more within the shade. "Oh," said Mr Thurman, quickly causing a roar of laughter, "the sun never hurts a Democrat," and facing the audience again he continued his speech.

"Now, my friends, in the long political life that I have led, I have heard a great many false pretenses preached to the people, a great many statements made that were intended to deceive and delude them, but in all my life I have never witnessed as much audacity as I noticed this year on the part of the advocates of a high protective tariff. They seem to have been suddenly affected with a singular disregard of the truth. I do not intend to call people hard names. I have all my life kept a civil tongue in my head, and I mean to keep it as long as I live, but I do say that some people sometimes seem to lose their senses or they cannot see the truth, and often, unfortunately, can't speak it. [Laughter and cheers.]

"Just think of it for one moment. We are told that a high tariff makes a country richer, as if it were possible to make a country richer by oppressively taxing its people. Ain't that a new way to make a man rich to run your hand into his pocket and take out what you find there? [Laughter] and that without any just reason whatever for doing so. Ain't that a singular way to make anybody rich? And that is precisely the plan that those folks advocate when they tell us that the country is to be made wealthy by means of high taxation. Again they have the audacity to say that this tariff is not paid by the consumers of the articles which are taxed. Why, if the consumers of taxed articles do not pay the tax, I would like to know who does? [A voice, "So would I," and cheers.] Do these protection orators pay for it? Do the manufacturers pay it? Who pays it if the people who consume the articles that are taxed don't? Can any man answer that question to the satisfaction ——

Here Judge Thurman was interrupted by the presentation of a note. He looked at it a moment and said:

"I am afraid there are some high protectionists in this audience, for a lady sends me this note to read to you. A lady has just had her pocket picked, and she thinks it is high tariff. [Laughter.] Well," said Judge Thurman, "I hope the high tariff man who has taken that lady's money will be caught and made to refund before he leaves Port Huron." [Laughter and applause.]

Continuing with his speech the judge said:

"Now, my friends, if you will reflect for a moment you will see that it is necessarily the case that tariff taxes are paid by the consumer of the articles which are taxed, and on all the domestic articles of a like kind which are manufactured in the United States. It is a curious fact, and one of the worst things about this tariff tax, that while the government gets $1 resulting from the tax, domestic manufacturers get $5, as it is best estimated, that never goes into the treasury at all.

"How does this happen? A man collect an importer brings goods into the United States to be sold. He cannot sell a yard or a pound until he pays this tariff tax. He pays it, therefore, and then sells it to the merchant. Of course he must get this tax back in price for what he sells or he would lose his money. The business would break up at once. Therefore he puts the tax on the original cost of goods and with that price added with the cost of transportation and his reasonable commercial profit, he sells the goods to the merchant; the merchant sells to the retail merchant and of course this tax when entered into the price continues in the price, and to it is added the profit of the merchant. Then the retail merchant sells to you, and of course he must get in this price, for otherwise he would sell for less than he gave for the goods, and no man would consent to do that. Therefore, the tax is in, when the cloth, for instance, is sold to you, and in the price you pay this retail merchant you also pay the whole of this tariff tax, the importer's profits, the wholesale merchant's profits and the retail merchant's profits, beside the interest upon their money.

"It is as plain as two and two are four. If I was a schoolmaster and a boy of ten years could not understand that after ten minutes' teaching I would give him up as hopelessly an idiot. [Laughter.] That is the fact in respect to this branch of the subject. Now, how much do you pay? The amount of dutiable goods imported into the United States in 1887 was in value $450,000,000 in round numbers. The duties collected on those goods, the tax, were $212,000,000 and a fraction. Therefore, in that single year a tax was levied on the people of the United States by the operation of this tariff law of $212,000,000 and a fraction, which went into the Federal treasury. But that as I have told you was the least of the burden, the domestic manufacturers of the same kind of commodities amounted to that year to $5,369,000,000, and as the price of those goods was raised by the tariff in nearly or equal proportion to the price of the goods that were imported, the amount which the people paid by reason of these high prices of what they had to buy or had to use amounted to one billion, that is about five times as much as the tax received by the government for [illegible]

"In other words the whole community was taxed about one billion dollars for the benefit of comparatively a small portion of the community, and that is said to be just. That is said to be fair play; that is said to be for the benefit of American people! Why don't they carry it out further? When they find in Port Huron a lawyer—I speak kindly of lawyers, because I am a lawyer myself—the proceeds of which profession do not afford him and his family comfortable support—why don't they tax you all for his benefit, so as to protect him? When they find a doctor whose income is not sufficient for himself and family, why don't they tax all the people of Port Huron, in order to add to the wealth of that doctor? and so on with everybody else, why don't they do it? Because they know perfectly well that the people would not stand it. And yet they do tax a man or do tax him and do not, pretty highly, sometimes on the medicine he is obliged to take.

"I remember that one of the most satisfactory votes I gave in the senate was to abolish the tax on quinine, so that a man with the fever and ague might have his medicine free."

Here the judge blew a trumpet blast on his historic bandanna, and everybody laughed as they cheered.

"Gentlemen, that's a good honest handkerchief, but had it not been for high protective tariff I could have bought it cheaper.

"Now, there are men who say the consumer does not pay the tax. Why, that is a most audacious assertion, and I have tried to show you that he must necessarily pay the tax. But if they want authority upon that subject, let me refer to some men who have spoken upon it, and whose words will hardly be gainsaid. First, I will go back to John Quincy Adams, and I dare say there are plenty of Republicans and some Abolitionists in this crowd who have great veneration for that man's memory. I know him well; I served in the house of representatives with him, and I know how intelligent he was, and I know how frank and outspoken he was. In the year 1832 he was chairman of the house committee on manufactures, and he said in a report made by him in that year: 'The doctrine that duties of import seem to cheapen the price of the articles on which they are levied seems to conflict with the first dictates of common sense.

"'The duty constitutes a part of the price of the whole mass of the articles of the market. It is substantially paid upon the article of domestic manufacture as well as upon that of foreign production. Upon one it is a bounty, upon the other a burden, and the repeal of the tax must operate as an equivalent reduction of the price of the article, whether foreign or domestic. We say so long as the importation continues, the duty must be paid by the purchaser of the article. The general and permanent effect must be to increase the price of the article to the extent of additional duty, and then it is paid by the consumer. If it were not so, if the general effect of adding to the duty was to reduce the price of the article upon which it is levied, the converse of the proposition would also be true, and the operation for increasing the price of the domestic article would be to repeal the duty on the same article imported—an experiment which the friends of our internal industry will not be desirous of making. We can not subscribe, therefore, to the doctrine that the duties of imports, protective of our own manufacturers, are paid by the foreign merchant or manufacturer.'

"But John Quincy Adams knew better, and he was too honest a man to make such a false pretense.

"Well, what said President Arthur? He was a good Republican. In his annual message to congress in 1882 83, President Arthur said: 'I recommend an enlargement of the free list—that is, of goods that pay no duty—so as to improve within it the numerous articles which yield an inconsiderable revenue, a simplification of the complex and inconsistent schedule of duties upon certain manufactures, particularly those of cotton, iron and steel, and a substantial reduction of the duties upon those articles, and upon sugar, molasses, wool and woolen goods.'

"Well, that is precisely what the Democrats are trying to do. That is precisely what the Mills bill, as it is called, attempts to do; and yet these gentlemen who are howling around about the benefits of protection, and the ruin that the Democrats are bringing on the country, tell you that this thing which President Arthur recommended only so lately is nothing in the world but free trade.

"The Republicans are more afraid of free trade than they are of rattlesnakes. [Laughter and applause.] They are terribly alarmed lest they should be bitten by free trade. [Renewed laughter.] Well, now, so far from this being free trade, the most striking thing about the Mills bill is that it is the most moderate reduction of tariff duties that has ever been attempted in this country. The average duty levied under the present was 47 per cent., and under the Mills bill the average would be only about 40 per cent, a reduction of only 7 per cent. upon all commodities taken together. Of course there are some things upon which the duty was reduced more.

"For instance, the duty is taken from a number of articles called raw material, which are used by manufacturers in their work, in the fabrication of their products. And as they receive this great benefit of having their raw materials free or with a comparatively small duty, the bill wisely provides that the articles manufactured by them when brought into the country shall pay a lower rate of duty than they did before. But that is nothing more than a compensation for taking off the duty from raw material.

"President Garfield said in the house of representatives on March 10, 1871: 'I was surprised at a remark of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [I do not know who that distinguished gentleman was, but he was a Michigander.] He asserted that there is no idea in the whole tariff that can be taken in a lump in order to stand. That coal must take salt by the hand and they, too, must take something else by the hand, and thus all interests unite with all forces before they can make a stand before the country. If this remark be true it strikes a blow at the whole tariff system, a blow I am not willing to strike. I am unwilling to admit that bad taxes must be tied to good ones, and thus be kept afloat. I think it is unwise to continue this duty on coal, and I am, therefore, in favor of its repeal.'

"This Michigander came from a lumber country, I expect, and he was in favor of log-rolling [laughter]; log-rolling on the largest kind of scale. That the man who wanted protection on one article should log-roll with the man who wanted protection on another, and thus, by all combining together and making one grand syndicate or pool, force their measure through the congress of the United States. But James A. Garfield said: 'If this remark be true, it strikes a blow at the whole tariff system, and a blow I am not willing to strike. I am unwilling to admit that bad taxes must be tied to good ones and thus kept afloat.'

"Now, my friends, there is another thing to which I wish to call your attention. They say all at once [illegible] is a very late doctrine; those advocates of protection are all at once seized with wonderful solicitude for the laboring man of the country, and they want a high protective tariff—not to benefit the capitalist; not to benefit the monopolist; not to benefit the manufacturer, according to their statement, but to benefit the laboring man. He is the man they seek to protect. And how are they going to protect him? Why, they say that a high protective tariff will better his condition, give him more wages—higher wages. I would like to know how that can be. I would like to know how taxing a laboring man on everything, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet is going to enrich him. [Laughter and applause.] Yet this is exactly what this tariff does. It taxes him on the hat he wears, on that cap I put on my head to keep it warm [applause and laughter]; it taxes him on his shirt, on his neckties, on his undercloths, on his coat, on his vest, on his breeches, on his stockings, on his boots, on everything. [Renewed cheering.] It raises the price and taxes him until the poor man can hardly make enough money, even if he gets a few cents more wages in the day—it taxes him until he can hardly make enough money to support himself and his little

JUDGE STACY'S GOLDEN WEDDING.

On Tuesday, the 21st inst., Judge C. A. Stacy and his wife celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage. Upon making up a list of invitations which they felt under obligation to extend, the number grew so large that they almost concluded to drop the undertaking; but they finally decided to divide the party into an afternoon and evening reception, and by this plan they could accommodate all. In regard to the arrangements at the house for the entertainment of the guests and the manner in which they were provided for, it would be unbecoming in us to speak. That is for others to judge. But we will mention a few general features of the affair which were particularly pleasing to the family, and which may be of public interest.

The afternoon party was given to old residents and guests from abroad, and numbered 225. A register was kept, in which each visitor was invited to transcribe his name and the year in which he came to Michigan. Most of these signatures are in the hand writing of the parties themselves. Nearly every guest was registered in the afternoon, but the evening party was so large that it was found utterly impossible to reach all. This little book will be carefully preserved and will be treasured by the family as one of the most pleasing mementoes of the party. Among the guests present from abroad we would mention the following: Judges Geddes and Lane, of Adrian, and nearly all the members of the county bar; ex-congressman Eldredge and ex-mayor Kimball, of Adrian, and ex-judge Howell, now of Detroit. Most of the above were accompanied by their wives. Also Mrs. B. F. Granger, of Ann Arbor; "Aunt Laura" Haviland, Mrs. H. M. Hixson, of Clinton, who was the oldest person present, being 88 years of age, and many other old pioneers who came to Michigan before its admission into the Union as a state. The venerable E. H. Custer, father of General Geo. Custer, came with Lieut. Elliott Gray, and Mrs. N. B. Bacon of Toledo, President Cleveland's sister, attended the evening reception in company with Mrs. Edwin B. Wood. Below are the names of those guests who became residents of our state or were born in Michigan prior to August 21, 1838, the date of the Judge's marriage:

It is quite likely that several others properly belong to this list, as many [illegible] settled in the state. Counting those who arrived after Michigan became a state and prior to 1838, and it would include nearly every person present at the afternoon gathering and probably one hundred of the evening visitors. During the day and evening the Judge shook hands with about 70 persons who knew him when he brought his young bride from New York and began domestic life in Tecumseh half a century ago.

In the evening outdoor lamps were provided, and the Tecumseh City Band gave several of their finest selections on the lawn. The attendance was mostly from the village, although several were present from other towns, and the spacious house was crowded to overflowing. But the company was a remarkably good natured one, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. It was an old-fashioned, informal gathering, at which everybody could feel at home. Counting the number of Japanese napkins taken away by the who must have left without supper, the evening's attendance was set down at 475.

The array of gifts was very handsome and attractive. They were arranged upon a large center table in the rear parlor. Our space will not permit us to give a detailed list of these, but we will mention the leading articles. At the head of the list should properly be placed a gold-lined silver goblet with a purse of gold coins, presented by the county bar. The goblet had this inscription: "Golden Wedding, August 21, 1888; Judge and Mrs. C. A. Stacy; full of years and honors. With the best wishes of the Lenawee county bar." An elegant silver tea service was given by a large club of Tecumseh friends in township and village; a silver and glass berry set by a club of Raisin and Ridgeway friends; a $20 gold coin by twenty village friends; a purse of $10 by another large club; three $5 gold coins by a club of three business friends; three $5 gold pieces by old domestics of the family, and tasty and appropriate individual gifts were displayed in great profusion. Hon. A. L. Millard, president of the county bar, formally presented the goblet with the names of the donors, in a few appropriate remarks. A small pamphlet of six pages, with an illuminated cover and verses on the inside pages, came from Mrs. C. E. Gridley and family, of Washington, D. C., former residents of Tecumseh. It was executed by hand in water colors, and was the chief curiosity of the gift table. An unique piece of the moulder's art came from the Adrian brick and tile company. A beautiful silver card receiver was probably the finest among the individual gifts. The entire number of persons represented in the gifts bestowed was 293.

Flowers and bouquets in great profusion were sent in by the neighbors, and kind hands were busy during the forenoon in ornamenting the rooms. One fine bouquet of asters came from a Toledo friend and a beautiful floral basket from Manchester. The decorations were tasty and beautiful.

The epistolary congratulations and regrets formed one of the most interesting features of the reunion. Letters by the score came pouring in for three or four days previous to the event, from old friends and acquaintances, not only in this vicinity, but from many different states. Many of them were accompanied with gifts, and all breathed hearty friendship and good will. How many old associations these letters brought to mind! These letters numbered 181. They came from ten states, one territory and the District of Columbia. Among them were missives from Frank and Louis Ransom, of Buffalo; Wm. H. Cleveland, appraiser of the port at Detroit; T. J. Hiller, of Hudson; three or four members of the bar from Adrian who were unable to be present; Charles S. Ingals, of Morenci; Edwin R. Smith, James W. Bradner and D. Keyes, of Clinton; ex-sheriff Cairns and sheriff Whitmore; C. H. Dewey, of Cambridge; Orrin Feeer, of Waterville, N. Y.; Rastus Stacy Ransom, the present Surrogate of New York City; Rev. H. L. Hayward, of Colorado; George W. Stacy, of East Buffalo, detained by sickness; W. Stearns, F. J. Hough and H. A. Angell, of Adrian; Esquire Palmer, of Bridgewater, and hosts of others. We append a few extracts from the more lengthy letters to show their general tenor.

JUDGE AND MRS. STACY:—

Dear Old Friends—I have received your complimentary card inviting to your Golden Wedding, and hereby extend my hearty, cordial congratulations that you are now alive and well, to celebrate such an interesting event. And all that I am now able to add to the felicity of the occasion is my sincere wishes that you may still live to enjoy many more years of happy life in your wedded union.

Vividly do I remember when we were both unmarried, in less blessed single life, and a retrospect deeply absorbs, almost bewilders me, by the grave, wonderful, exciting and widely varied changes which have passed over, and many [illegible] time our nation, state and ourselves. But the beneficent creator has been our preserving power. "The Judge of all the earth doeth right." Fraternally yours, etc.,

D. S. CURTIS.

ADRIAN, Aug. 15, 1888.
HON. C. A. STACY:—

My Dear Friend—It is with pleasure I take this occasion to acknowledge the kind invitation extended myself and wife to be present on the occasion of your Golden Wedding anniversary. It would be in accordance with our wishes to be present at the interesting event, but prior engagements will prevent that gratification.

We take this occasion to congratulate you and your dear wife that kind Providence has vouchsafed the rare enjoyment of fifty years of married life and happiness, and trust there may be many years of wedded bliss yet in store. Sincerely your Friend,

W. H. WALBY.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, August 17, 1888.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Willits regret that it will be impossible for them to attend the fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Judge and Mrs. C. A. Stacy to which they are so kindly invited. They send their most hearty congratulations and kindest greetings over the auspicious occasion.

YORKVILLE, Mich., Aug. 15, '88.
JUDGE AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—

Accept our congratulations on the near approach of the 50th anniversary of your wedding. Also our sincere thanks for the invitation extended to be present at the celebration of the Golden Wedding on Aug. 21, 1888, at your home in Tecumseh. Being absent on a vacation, and having made plans which will make it impossible for us to be your guests at the time named, we are constrained regretfully to decline the invitation. Wishing you a very pleasant time, and that you both may be spared in health and happiness yet many days, we are sincerely yours,

MR. AND MRS. WM. H. BABBITT.

TECUMSEH, Mich., Aug. 21, 1888.
MY DEAR JUDGE & MRS. STACY:—

It is with very sincere regrets that Mrs. Hamilton and I feel compelled by the state of my health to abandon the pleasing thought of attending the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding, at your home to-day. We should esteem it a great gratification to be present and enjoy with you the occasion. Please accept our earnest congratulations and our sincere wish that many years of activity may be added to your useful and honorable lives.

Very truly yours,

DR. AND MRS. I. S. HAMILTON.

ANN ARBOR, Aug. 13, 1888.
DEAR JUDGE AND MRS. STACY:—

It is with great regret I am compelled to say that official duties will put it out of my power to unite with other friends in celebrating your golden wedding in your own home. Mrs. Cooley will also be unable to attend. But we send little tokens of our regard and with them go hearty wishes that your days may still be long in the land and that the evening sun of life may ever shine brightly upon you.

Ever truly yours,

T. M. COOLEY.

ERIE, Pa., Aug. 13, 1888.
MR. AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—

My wife writes me that she has received invitations to be present on the 31st, to participate in the ceremonies of your golden wedding. I will say for us both that we congratulate you most sincerely on the happy event, and should be ever so glad to have joined you, but circumstances which I cannot control prevent. You will therefore accept our regrets and this small memento of our love and esteem. I have had this coin in my possession for over thirty years. Ever your friends,

MR. AND MRS. WM. VANCAMP.

(This coin was a 25 cent gold piece.)

JACKSON, Mich., Aug. 20, 1888.
HON. C. A. STACY:—

My Dear Sir—I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of your invitation to attend the golden wedding. It reminds me most forcibly of the many friendships which I formed in Tecumseh so many years ago, and of your great kindness and support when you was a member of the school board and I was superintendent of your schools. It would therefore afford me the greatest pleasure to meet yourself and family and those of our old friends who still remain, on that happy occasion, but circumstances—often so relentless—prevent our leaving home at this time. Permit me however to congratulate most heartily both you and your good wife, that you have been spared to see the anniversary which comes to so few, and to express the wish that you may live to see and to enjoy many another anniversary of your wedding day. Yours most sincerely,

U. W. LAWTON.

HILLSDALE, Mich., Aug. 22, '88.
HON. AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—

Permit me as an old friend of your early days, to congratulate you on your approach to the golden period of your married life. * * * It is comforting for us to look back a year or two, and [illegible] a pleasure to be surrounded by our entire family of sons and daughter and grandchildren, to receive their congratulations, together with some three hundred of our neighbors and friends from abroad. Again wishing you all the happiness of which fifty years has given you a foretaste, and asking to be excused from attendance on account of waning health and the infirmities of age, we are truly your friends.

F. M. HOLLOWAY,
S. B. HOLLOWAY.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., Aug. 12, '88.
JUDGE AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—

Dear Cousins—Your card of invitation to the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding is received. We shall have to send regrets. Well, Phon, does it seem fifty years since you brought Maria to Tecumseh the first time? It does not to me. It was Phon and Maria then. But, oh, Phon, how you did abuse her that fall. I think if Ed. had not been there you would have pestered her to death. Do you remember how you chased her through every room in the house, with your hands full of provisions, intending to compel her to eat, if you caught her, whether she could or not. How mean you were! Maria will say so now. Thank the Lord, she lived through those trying times.

I would like to be there but I should want to meet Beriah Brown, Sutton, Sholes, Beaman, Dr. Patterson, Finch, Lattimer, Col. Anderson, Gen. Brown, Judge Hoag, Col. Holmes, Fargo and others who were there then. Many have passed away, but I remember them kindly. Your cousin,

E. C. STACY.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 14, 1888.
MY DEAR MR. AND MRS. STACY:—

Your kind invitation to attend the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding I have just received, and I do indeed regret that I cannot be present with you on that interesting occasion, although I shall be with you in spirit. Please receive my warmest congratulations and best wishes for your present and future welfare. In the past God laid his hand heavily upon you, but your present seems bright and joyous, and I pray that the future may be golden, doubly enriched by the kindness and love of the many dear friends you have won as you have journeyed on the pathway of life. May your life's sunset be gorgeous with rays of light from the Son of Righteousness, to make more beautiful your entrance into the Golden City of our God; where I trust we may all meet before the great white throne to glorify and praise Him that sitteth thereon forever and ever.

I intend coming to Michigan in September, and shall hold this invitation good for a visit with you at that time. Trusting I may see you all well and happy at an early day in Sept., at which time I shall be sixty-seven years old. I will say good-bye in sincerity and love.

MRS. Z. K. DEMOTT.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 14, 1888.

My Dear Friends—Mrs. Koon and myself regret exceedingly our inability to be present at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of your marriage. I cannot however content myself with merely formal regrets. I remember too well your uniform kindness, Judge Stacy, to me when I was an aspiring but trembling young sprig of the law; and the help you were many times when I was floundering deep in the mire of some knotty legal question, to feel aught but kindness for you. And while I have not seen you for many years, and may never see you again in this world, I want to assure you that I reverence, admire and love you as I have few men. I wish you joy on the occasion of your golden wedding, and many years of happiness thereafter.

Yours very truly, M. B. KOON.
To Judge and Mrs. C. A. Stacy.

MEDINA, Aug. 20, 1888.
JUDGE AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—

Your cordial invitation to attend the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding, Tuesday, Aug. 21, was received Friday. I can assure you that it would give me great pleasure to be with you on that occasion, but other engagements will prevent my attendance. It is very pleasant to look upon an aged couple who have walked together hand in hand, who have shared each other's joys and borne each other's sorrows for fifty long years. Accept my best wishes for your health and prosperity in the future. May your last days be your best days.

Respectfully yours,

GEO. W. MOORE.

ADRIAN, Aug. 20, 1888.

Dr. and Mrs. Owens' compliments to Judge and Mrs. Stacy, and regret their inability to be present at the interesting occasion which closes the half century of your lives. May health, happiness and peace continue with you, while the golden rays of the setting sun of life shine brightly on your future pathway, are the warm and cordial wishes of your friends,

WOODLAND AND J. P. OWEN.

MANCHESTER, Aug. 20, 1888.
MR. AND MRS. STACY:—

Dear Friends—Please accept our compliments and congratulations, and [illegible] you to-morrow. We had anticipated much pleasure in the event, and fully intended till to day to be present, but circumstances render it impossible. But we shall be with you in spirit, and may you be spared to each other many days. Yours with kindest regards, MR. & MRS. T. J. FARRELL.

JUDGE AND MRS. STACY:—

It would have given us great pleasure to have complied with your handsome invitation for the 21st, but previous claims prevent. Allow us to send you our sincere regrets, but at the same time our heartfelt congratulations. May the prismatic bow of covenant and promise span the entire horizon of your earthly existence, your aim be the flowery kingdom, your zenith heaven and may the sun of Austerlitz shine on the 21st without a cloud. Sincerely yours,

MR. AND MRS. W. ASTELL.

"Think of a Family

You can bring that about, if you want to. Possibly some father or mother may read this, to whom it isn't true; but we doubt it.

Consider what it means. It means that you have a Cyclopedia in your living room, your evening family-room, the handiest place to get at when you want it; and when a subject comes up that one of the family wants to know more of, you turn to it in your Cyclopedia, just as you turn to a word in your dictionary.

This set of books can be the means of constant growth in knowledge, in use of the mind, in the habit of seeking light on whatever is dark, for you and your family, if you will have it so. Or you can neglect it as many neglect their dictionaries. All we said was that you have your choice.

You are thinking, "Can I get it?"

If you really want it, the very fact that you want it almost certainly puts it within your reach. We should like to see an exception or hear of one. We don't believe there is any.

If you desire the end, let us hear from you. You shall know the means.

The International Cyclopedia is one for you. Latest, most comprehensive, broadest, cheapest. (These words lean on one another a little.)

ADDISON, Mich., Aug. 13, 1888.
TO JUDGE AND MRS. C. A. STACY:—
Respected Friends—We regret very much that arrangements matured some days since will prevent us from being present at your wedding anniversary on the 21st inst. May the occasion prove a pleasant one and many more years of married life yours to enjoy. Very respectfully,
A. J. KEMPTON.
MRS. A. J. KEMPTON.

CHAPIN, Iowa, Aug. 14, 1888.
I am very sorry, my dear friends, that I could not be at your golden wedding. I am sure it was a happy time, and I wish I could have been there to offer my good wishes in person. "May you live long and see many good days" yet upon the earth, is the prayer of your friend,
HATTIE A. HURD.

VINELAND, N. J., Aug. 14, 1888.
DEAR MR. AND MRS. STACY:—
The distance preventing Alta and myself from enjoying the happy occasion at your home Aug. 21, will not interfere with our thinking of you, with the hope that your lives may be filled with happiness for many years, and that some time in the future we may have the pleasure of meeting you again. Very truly yours,
LIBBIE ROBINSON.

CONCORD, Cal., Aug. 21, 1888.
C. A. AND MRS STACY:—
Your kind invitation to be present on the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding day has come to hand, and I must write you to show that I appreciate the compliment, though you can scarcely expect my presence, except in the spirit. I hear but seldom from T. and really did not know whether you were yet in the flesh or had gone to join the great majority on the other shore. Though more than thirty years ago it does not seem long since I so often sat in your library digging away at your collection of books, which I suppose still grace the same shelves. Cooper's novels I read, wept over the woes of Leather Stocking and sailed the seas over with the Pilot, Red Rover and Water Witch.

I recollect a party at your house one night, where the Fountain girls and I forget who else besides myself, sat down with the Judge, Scoyel and Loana to play "Rounce," and the Judge told us a story of a nigger who was nearly drowned while being baptized, who remarked as he came up strangling, puffing and blowing:—"Somebody's thousand dollar nigger will get drowned with this d——d nonsense." Long years have passed—cares, trials, losses, bereavements and some joys have come to us all.

That you and yours may live out your full allotted time with comfort and pleasure, surrounded by your children and friends, I earnestly hope. Please remember me to them all most kindly, and believe me ever your sincere friend and well-wisher,
WM A. PATTERSON.

For fifty two years Judge Stacy has made Tecumseh his home, and has been identified with the social, business and professional interests of this community. In proportion to the means at his command, no resident has done more to aid the town of his adoption. No poor man ever asked assistance from Consider A. Stacy in vain, in the days of his prosperity, when he was able to render it. Every public enterprise always found in him a friend. To receive the greetings and congratulations of so many of his old acquaintances touched his heart strings and made him grow young again. He felt that the toil expended and the service rendered by him in years past for the benefit of Tecumseh were remembered and appreciated. If the guests present enjoyed the occasion half as well as the Judge and his wife did, they will be abundantly repaid for their trouble. The day of his golden wedding will mark one of the brightest spots in his long and active life.

A Card.

We hereby tender our thanks to the Tecumseh City Band and to all others who so kindly assisted and remembered us on the day of our anniversary party.
C. A. STACY.

A happy matrimonial party was held at Mrs. John W. Keeney's residence in Franklin on the 21st inst., the occasion being the marriage of Mr. Thos. O. Perry, of Chicago, Ill., and Miss Mary E. Keeney. The ceremony was pronounced by the father of the groom, the venerable Dr. G. D. Perry of this village. The company comprised only the family relatives and a very few intimate friends. It was a quiet home-like wedding exactly suited to the taste of the contracting parties. The twain took the afternoon train to Detroit, for a trip around the lakes to Chicago, where they expect to reside. Both parties are well known in this section of the county, having passed their childhood in the town of Franklin. For several years past the bride has filled a responsible position in the schools of Tecumseh most creditably, and the groom has kept up his acquaintance here. They have an extended circle of friends who will offer their warmest congratulations, among whom the HERALD claims a place second to none.

THE SUPERVISOR'S REUNION.

An Interesting Program Presented at Stony Grove, Devil's Lake, last Wednesday. Election of Officers, Etc.

When President Sinclair arose to call the meeting to order at the Supervisor's reunion at Stony Grove, Wednesday last, he looked out upon a heterogeneous crowd of quite large dimensions. The 12:30 C. J. & M. train had just arrived and brought a train load of people mostly from Tecumseh, among whom were Hons. Geo. Howell and J. D. Shull, who intended to amuse the audience with brief addresses, and took a seat on the platform.

The audience contained supervisors, past and present; county officers past, present and future; in fact the future seemed to be in the majority in regard to county officers, and would be candidates were as plentiful as—well "the woods were full of 'em." Then there was the usual number of private citizens and their families.

After the Addison band had relieved their lungs of a stirring quickstep via. brass instruments, the secretary, T. M. Hunter offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

SEC. 1. This association shall be known as the Supervisors' and County Officers' association of Lenawee county.

SEC. 2. The object of the association is the promotion of social intercourse among the members thereof.

SEC. 3. All persons who have held the office of supervisor, or any county office in said county, shall be eligible to membership.

SEC. 4. The officers of said association shall be a president, a vice president, a treasurer, a secretary, and an executive committee of five. The duties of these officers shall be those usually required in organizations, and they shall be chosen at the annual meeting.

SEC. 5. The annual meeting shall held at such time and such place as shall be selected by the executive committee

SEC. 6. The annual dues for members of the association shall be 25 cents, payable at the annual meeting, except as otherwise ordered by the executive committee.

SEC. 7. The family of any member shall be entitled to the rights and privileges of the association.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Winton, and after a few preliminary remarks by the President and music by the glee club, Hon. J. K. Boies, of Hudson delivered an address of welcome. He said:

"We have assembled here this afternoon on the occasion of the third annual reunion of county supervisors and officers of Lenawee county. It may be I am the only man present who has never been a supervisor or county official. It may be that was the reason I was chosen to deliver a short address on this occasion. I have the honor to represent this afternoon the great array of outs—those who do not hold office. The private soldiers always outnumber the rest of the army. In being a private citizen of Lenawee, who have never been favored or burned with these honorable positions I extend to you, Mr. Chairman, to your committee, to the supervisors ex. and present, to the county officers ex. and present, I extend to you a cordial and hearty welcome to the festivities of this occasion, oh yes, and the ladies also. There seems to be a spirit of welcome abroad in our land about these picnic times. I join with this warm sunshine, and this grateful shade, amid all these things in welcoming you a day of rest and social enjoyment. Mr. Boies paid a glowing tribute to our state and county in his closing remarks."

The glee club again favored the audience with a song, and J. D. Shull was introduced. He made a short, sharp and witty address that held the audience throughout. He was somewhat surprised to see the prefix Hon. on the part of the front of his name in the program, as he never had the honor to represent his district at the state or national capitol, and the only reason he could assign to it, was that President Cleveland, unknown to him, had appointed him to a territorial judgship. He called attention to the duties of supervisor and the polite manner in which they were treated on their annual tour after statistics, the nice answers they received as to the age, sex, and color of the baby. The supervisor is not subjected to any annoyance from savage curs when on his tour. About the time he is expected to arrive, the dog is carefully chained in the smoke house or the cellar. As supervisors and county officers we should gratefully remember the fact that we are citizens and favored representatives of the grandest and best government on the planet that we are favored representatives of a government composed of sixty million of free men. The destiny of this country is onward and upward. The citizens of this country have been industrious and intelligent, have earned their reward and are largely in comfortable circumstances. We are fortunate residents of the best country and the good state of Michigan.

After more music, Hon. Geo. Howell was introduced and made an interesting address, dwelling upon the methods of electioneering in campaign times, how the would-be candidate slyly circulates around among his intimate friends and silently puts in his best efforts toward securing the office, and expresses great surprise, if elected, how he came to be the lucky man, as he did not want the office. We are gathered here for the purpose of consulting together. It was a pleasure for you and I to gather together in our younger days. It may have been our pleasure also to have selected the best girl of the flock, and gentlemen I trust it may be your pleasure and mine to give to that same woman the right of suffrage. The woman rocks the world. You and I chose to be politicians and office holders. There may be some standing here. There never was gathered a more honest set than is gathered here to-day.

The following resolution offered by W. B. Keyser, of Clinton, was unanimously apopted:

WHEREAS, Our absent member, James R. Cairns, ex-sheriff, is stricken with sickness, and his life trembling in the balance,

Resolved, That we extend to him and his family our profound sympathy, and hope of ultimate recovery.

The following, offered by Mr. Hunter, was also passed:

Resolved, That the thanks of this association are hereby tendered to ex-Supervisor D. D. Sinclair for the honest and satisfactory manner in which he has, for three years past, discharged the duties of the office of president of this association.

After remarks by Messrs. Lamb, Blackmar, and Dewey, the election of officers took place and resulted as follows:

President—S. H. Raymond, Rollin.
Vice Pres.—A. G. Hall, Raisin.
Sec.—T. M. Hunter, Adrian.
Treas.—C. H. Dewey, Cambridge.

The board of directors will be appointed by the president.

The financial statement showed a shortage of $8.00.

THE DARK CONTINENT.

A Frenchman named Lucien Fenoux, who has traveled three years in Africa collecting natural history objects for a firm in Paris, lately arrived in Montreal. Speaking of the Congo district he said:

"The Congo district is a tract of land more than one million five hundred thousand square miles in extent, divided into three parts, the Portuguese, French and Free settlements, of which the last named is by far the most extensive. The French portion is on the north side of the river, the Portuguese on the south side, and a narrow strip on both sides of the river belongs to the Free State.

"Only the portion of the Congo from the ocean to Stanley Pool is navigable. From Manyanga to Ubangi there are many rapids and falls making navigation impossible.

"Stanley, on his first voyage in 1882, formed the Free State of the Congo, which flow stands under the protectorate of Belgium.

"There is no industry at all in the entire district. All business is confined to the exchange of produce for imports. The produce consists mostly of ivory, rubber, palm oil, copal, a kind of coffee, a sort of paint, and coffee. Manchester cotton goods, rum, gun powder, flint lock guns, second hand clothing and furniture are the principal articles of import.

"The natives on the coast are really less civilized than those of the interior, as they fall prey to the vices and drunkenness and [illegible] from the European.

"Whatever [illegible] find, if they take a fancy to it, they adopt it [illegible] country, which is opened upon [illegible] or [illegible] the Congo is very interesting, owing to its [illegible] and [illegible].

"As [illegible] exists among the natives. The children are a distinct division of the tribe. The natives [illegible] the families if they are paid, but [illegible] generally [illegible]. The only [illegible] the missionaries for such the children whom they attract and educate."

FLOWERS IN THE HAT.

Where Wearing a Bouquet Is a Most Significant Custom.

It is the custom in the Tyrol for a man, when he is engaged to be married, to wear a bouquet in his hat. The damsel gives him, every day or two, a fresh bouquet, picked from the flower-pots in her window.

Should she prove fickle and jilt the swain, the other young men of the village assemble under her window and throw down the flower pots.

A stranger wonders, on seeing so many men with bouquets stuck in their hats, why they do not marry, especially as not a few of them are what we call "old bachelors." The explanation is that the village commune will not allow any person to marry unless he can show that he has laid by a sum of money sufficient to support a family.

A lady, traveling through Tyrol in a stellwagon, a cross between a diligence and an omnibus, overheard the driver talking to a man at his side on the box, and complaining of his occupation.

He had worked hard for many years, he said, to get money enough to marry, but the sum was far below what it must be before the commune would give him permission to marry the woman to whom he was engaged. It increased so slowly that he did not know if he should ever get the coveted permission.

Sometimes a dozen or more of engaged young men and women, despairing of ever getting money enough to secure the commune's permission, go on a pilgrimage to Rome, begging their way on foot. When there they are married, but, on their return to the native village, they are fined as a punishment for breaking the law.

MASTER AND SCHOLAR.

An Anecdote of John Lothrop Motley.

The Rev. Samuel J. May taught a small school in Natick, Mass., for one summer, and amongst his pupils was John Lothrop Motley.

Forty years afterward master and scholar met in Rome.

"Mr. Motley," said Mr. May, "I think I am entitled to some share of your great reputation."

"Very well," said the Historian, "you may have all you can justly claim, provided you will take it away."

"Why, sir," said Mr. May, "have you forgotten that I taught you to read?"

"Did you?" exclaimed Mr. Motley; "then you have made more of it than I have known how ever since."—Youth's Companion.

MUTILATED EARS.

Cruel Punishments of the Olden Time.

Any mutilation of the ear which involves the loss of a portion or all of it has always been a mark of disgrace. In one of the statutes of Edward VI, the penalty affixed for its violation is the "loss of an ear and perpetual infamy."

been invented and the loss of one of these members was a public badge of shame for life.

Following the retributive law of Moses, probably the punishment originated in the ecclesiastical courts. It is first mentioned in the trials of offenses against the church and some of the earless clerics were noted men. The sentence to the pillory frequently had the additional punishment of the loss of one or both ears added.

Daniel Foe, or Foe, later in life known as Daniel Defoe, wrote a pamphlet called "The Shortest Way with the Dissenters," and lost his ears. Pope, in his "Dunciad," speaks of the author of "Robinson Crusoe": "Earless on high stood unabashed Defoe."

He was placed in the pillory three times. That instrument being on a raised platform explains the line.

Dr. Bastwick, who published more pamphlets than pills, concluded one of his essays with: "From plague, pestilence and famine, from bishops, priests and bacons, good Lord deliver us." This was so startling an affront that the doctor was sentenced to the pillory and to lose both his ears.

The execution of his sentence was a sort of public fete. His friends gathered before the pillory and shouted words of encouragement. His wife climb d upon the pillory and kissed him. When his ears were cut off she put them in a bottle "in lavender water" and carried them home.

The celebrated Prynne suffered a similar punishment.

The names of lesser criminals have escaped the permanent records but historians tell us a number of early English Parliamentary enactments making the loss of an ear a penalty in law.

Encroachment on a church or churchyard, by acts passed during the fifth and sixth years of the reign of Edward VI, made the loss of both ears. If the prisoner had no ears—which implies that there were industrial criminals 350 years ago—he was to be branded with the letter F in the cheek.

In the second and third years of the same monarch a combination among victuallers and artificers to raise the price of provisions or the rate of labor, for the third offense were punished by the pillory and the loss of an ear. The statute not only extended to the combinations to raise wages but to regulate the quantity of work or to lessen the hours of labor.

In later years the loss of an ear or part of one has also been regarded as implying disgrace. One of the favorite ways of mutilating an enemy in a rough and tumble fight is to bite off his ear. In disreputable brawls and in low resorts brute instinct makes ear mutilation a fit revenge for almost any wrong.

Jack Slade, a notorious desperado, in a fit of rage is said to have cut off the ears of a man he had murdered. He kept them in his pocket and boastfully exhibited them when in a drunken and dangerous mood.

When he saw on the poker table a stake he wanted he particularly Jack played the ears. Flagging them on the table they beat four aces or a straight flush, for Jack had a pistol in each hand the next instant. He always took the pot on the play.

WHENCE COLORS COME.

Every Quarter of the Globe Ransacked for the Materials of Which They Are Made.

A well known artist gave me some curious information the other day regarding the sources from which the colors one finds in a paint box are derived. Every quarter of the globe is ransacked for the material, animal, vegetable and mineral, employed in the manufacture.

From the cochineal insects are obtained the gorgeous carmine, as well as the crimson, scarlet, carmine and purple lakes.

Sepia is the inky fluid discharged by the cuttle fish to render the water opaque for its concealment when attacked.

Indian yellow it from the camel.

The exquisite Prussian blue is got by fusing horses' hoofs and other refuse animal matter with impure potassium carbonate. It was discovered by an accident.

Blue black is from the charcoal of the vine stalk.

Lampblack is soot from certain resinous substances.

Gamboge comes from the yellow sap of a tree, which the natives of Siam catch in cocoanut shells.

Raw umber is an earth from Umbria, and is also burned.

To these vegetable pigments may probably be added Indian ink, which is said to be made from burnt camphor. The Chinese, who alone produce it, will not reveal the secret of its composition.

Mastic, the base of the varnish so called—is from the gum of the mastic tree, indigenous to the Grecian archipelago.

Bistre is the soot of wood ashes.

Chinese white is zinc, scarlet is iodine of mercury and [illegible] or native vermilion is from quicksilver ore—Iowa State Register.

Catching a Man-Eating Tiger.

A famous man-eating tiger was recently captured alive in India. A pit was dug for a [illegible] tethered a live bullock. After two days the beast came around and promptly jumped in.

To capture him a second pit was dug near the first and of the same depth. From this a tunnel was run to the first pit, a thin wall of earth being left between the end of the tunnel and the pit. A strong bamboo cage was pushed into this tunnel from a second pit. A goat was placed in the cage and the wall of earth was broken down.

The tiger sprang upon the goat, the entrance to the cage was quickly closed, and the beast was fast, and stayed so until he was safe in Calcutta.

THE TRIP OF THE SPIES.

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 8.

Text of the Lesson, Num. xiii. 17-33. Commit Verses 30-33—Golden Text, Num. xiii, 30—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson, which records the sending of the twelve spies to search out the land before entering into it, might well be entitled, "the sad work of unbelief," for, although we are told that Moses sent them, and in the first and second verses that "the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, send thou men," yet the reason of this sending is seen from Deut. i, 22, to be because the people demanded it. The word of the Lord was, "Behold, I have set the land before you; go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, to give unto them, and to their seed after them" (Deut. i, 8-21); so the only thing for faith to do was to go up and possess it.

17-20. These verses give us the instructions of Moses to the twelve spies ere they set forth. There was one from each tribe, every one a ruler, all heads of the children of Israel. (Vs. 2, 3.) It does seem to be a small, mean business in which they were about to engage, to see whether the land were good or bad, fat or lean, well wooded or not. If some father or mother should plan a gift of great value for their children, the very best and most appropriate that their love could suggest or devise, it would surely not be very flattering to the parents or creditable to the children if the latter should wish to examine the gift before consenting to accept it.

21, 24. This is the record of their journey and their search. Zin and Rehob were the southern and northern boundaries (Josh. xv, 1; xix, 28); so they went through the whole land to the extreme north. Hebron or Mamre was Abraham's tenting ground, where he built an altar unto the Lord after Lot was separated from him (Gen. xiii, 18); there, also, the Lord and His angels appeared to him as he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day, and rested themselves under the tree while they partoook of the food prepared by Abraham and Sarah (Gen. xviii). and there Sarah died and was buried in the cave of Machpelah (Gen. xxiii, 2-19). In that cave lay the bodies of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Leah (Gen. xlix, 29-31); it is about twenty miles south of Jerusalem, and about half way to Beersheba. What a privilege to visit such a place! Had these rulers been men of faith, how that faith would have been strengthened by the remembrance of the promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. It is evident that Caleb never forgot this visit to Hebron, for forty-five years later he asks and receives from Joshua this same Hebron for his inheritance, nothing daunted by the fact that the Anakims were still there and that the cities were great and fenced, but saying, "if the Lord be with me I shall be able to drive them out." (Josh. xiv, 10-15.)

25-27. They returned after forty days. Some time we shall see more than we do now of the significance of that wonderful number forty. We think at once of Moses in the mount with God, Elijah visiting the same mount, Jesus in the wilderness with the wild beasts, the period between His resurrection and ascension, and the many other forties of the Scriptures, but who has seen the depths of significance in any of them?

"Surely it floweth with milk and honey, and this is the fruit of it." Just as God had said, truly a good land, and they had nothing to do but march up at His command and possess and enjoy it. It was His gift to them. Their part was to obey and take it. He brought them out, that He might bring them in and give them the land which He sware unto their fathers (Deut. vi, 23). Abundance of peace, fullness of joy, rivers of pleasures, green pastures, waters of quietness, quiet resting places—these are some of the fruits of or privileges of the Christian life which we ought constantly to enjoy, and thus give a good report of the redeemed land and of Him who brought us there.

28, 29. "Nevertheless, the people be strong, * * * the cities walled and very great, and moreover we saw the children of Anak there." This was simply leaving God out of the question, and considering only their own strength. How could they, with that Tabernacle standing in their midst, the pillar of cloud over it and the presence of God in it, thus forget Him and talk as if it was a question of what they were or of what they could do? Let us with these verses consider also verses 31-33, and then we will save the joyful song of verse 30 for the last.

"We are not able . . . they are stronger than we. We were in our own sight as grasshoppers." It reminds us of the record in Job xxix, where the pronouns "I," "my," "me," referring to Job, are used about forty five times, and God is mentioned or referred to only five times. In Job xlii, 5, 6, we hear him saying: "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." Then do we find health and prosperity restored to him. Whether it be Isaiah, or Daniel, or John, when the glory of the Lord is revealed to them, there is no beauty or strength left in them, but on their faces in the dust is where we find them. When Nebuchadnezzar talked of his great Babylon, and the might of his power and the honor of his majesty, he was soon made to know that the King of Heaven is able to abase those who walk in pride (Dan. iv, 30-37). When the day of the Lord comes all lofty looks and haughtiness of men shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day (Isa. ii, 12-17). Blessed are those who are willing now to come down of their own accord, submit themselves to God, and let Him work in them to will and to do of His good pleasure. These ten rulers in Israel, although they had seen God's mighty works in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness; although God's presence was in their midst, and they had heard His voice from the holy mount, yet they knew Him not, nor trusted in Him, nor thought of His power so often manifested on their behalf. Unbelief in the promises of God had hardened their hearts and blinded their eyes and they saw only insuperable difficulties.

30. "Caleb stilled the people." We must be still if we would hear and know the mind of God, and that voice which stilled the storm on Galilee has in all ages stilled the soul that has been willing to heed it. "Stand thou still a while that I may show thee the word of God," said Samuel to Saul; and to the people he said, "Stand still that I may reason with you before the Lord" (1 Sam. ix, 27; x, 7); "Be still and know that I am God" is a helpful precept for every day (Ps. xlvi, 10). "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." The minority report was the correct one this time. It has been truly said that one with God is always a majority, but the world cannot see that. Every word of this utterance is weighty. It is the language of faith, of one who sees God and not self or difficulties. "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

GAMBLING BEFORE THE WAR.

Reminiscences of Big Play South in the Days of Slavery.

For years gambling on the Mississippi [illegible] with interest. How the ideal planter got through with his patrimony; how sixty or seventy bales of cotton or fifteen colored people changed hands in a few hours; but the gambler is always portrayed as a slender, lithe and well-formed youth, with black hair, dark eyes, high boots and a dirk—dashing cavalier sort of a fellow that would brook no insult. The bluff, good-natured, go-easy man of about thirty-five that did the winning has been ignored.

Gambling was heavy and all the large cotton and passenger packets had forward of the cabin a room about 20 by 25 feet, called the social hall. This hall was fitted up in the most luxurious style, with a bar, chairs and cardtables.

At these tables, all day and night the planters, river merchants and officers were wont to tempt fortune. The favorite game was draw-poker; but in those times the gentlemen would bet on anything, from what kind of a fish a man would catch on his line to a steamboat race, and the more a man lost the bigger lion he was. Even now gambling is carried on to a great extent on all rivers, especially on the Red and Illinois rivers.

The most successful gamblers in antebellum days were George Brooks and "Bullet-neck" Green, so called from a bullet that was lodged in his neck. The latter gentleman played at and won the biggest game ever played on the Mississippi.

It was a game of draw poker between himself and three other planters. Green had about $20,000 on board the boat, but the other fellows had oversized his pile, and the game was $100 ante with no limit. Green held a remarkable hand and had staked his last dollar, but no one would "call" him. So, motioning the captain of the vessel to him, he asked for a loan, as he did not want to be run out of the game. To this the captain assented, knowing Green to be a very wealthy man, and he told the clerk to let him have any amount.

When these preliminaries were settled the players went on raising the stakes until $200,000 was on the board when one of the players called, and Green deliberately laid his cards face down on the table and said, "Boys, if I win the pot I will never turn another card;" then "showed up" four aces and a king—a hand that can't be beat—as a matter of course, winning.

It is estimated that this man won over $250,000 at cards.

The gambler in the days of slavery seldom cheated, and when he did and was discovered as it he could be found a few minutes after with a bowie-knife or bullet in him—more likely the former, for then it was a favorite weapon used with great dexterity, being thrown by experts twenty feet and driven through a mark on a two-inch plank.

It was seldom a game was played without every participant having his revolver or bowie on the table, but now the players are on the bunco order and the ones they swindle less nervy.

A DANISH WEDDING.

The number of invitations vary according to the means of the brides' parents, but there are seldom less than 50 assembled, and often as many as 150, old and young.

A day or two before the wedding the various guests send their gifts, not to the bride, but to her parents, consisting generally of contributions toward the expected feast, and beyond participating in much revelry and good cheer the bride and bridegroom do not personally benefit.

One friend contributes, say, eight pounds of golden butter piled high on a platter fringed with greenery, another a score or two of eggs or some chickens. A lamb, joints of beef, or a small cask of fine old October brew, follow in quick succession; and in this way the parents frequently receive more provender than can be consumed at the festivity, and their sole expense consists in the hiring of plates and dishes from the nearest stores in the town where the farmer sells his grain and buys his wife's groceries and ribbons.

For months before the wedding the bride with her mother and sisters have been hard at work at the loom, spinning and weaving all the linen for the person, as well as for the house; which store, together with a couple of young horses, a couple of cows and a pair of sheep, invariably forms a part of her marriage portion.

Bridal ornaments are not heirlooms as in Norway. The Danish peasant girl wears a simple crown of myrtle with her national costume—varying with the district, but always charming—and pots of myrtle are carefully cherished by girlish hands through the long winters in anticipation of the great event. Her sole heirloom is the great oaken dower chest, heavily clamped and often finely carved, that holds her goodly store of linen.

At 11 o'clock on the wedding morning all the guests meet at the house of the bride, driving up in carts, and when she is ready the long procession starts for the church, headed by two outriders, who are the "best men." Next follows a cart containing the band, three or four brass instruments, and that standing dish, the village fiddler.

After them comes the cart containing [illegible] the home to put the finishing touches to the festive cloth already spread. Behind the bride comes the bridegroom, also alone, driven by a karle.

He sits in the middle of his vehicle in all the conscious glory of a new tall hat and vast cloak with many capes, worn even in the summer time, as lending a dignity suitable to the solemnity and as a mark of distinction.

Near the church children strew flowers, as well as near the bride's old home, where there is also an archway draped with flags. Returning from church the bride and bridegroom sit together, the band preceding them, heralding their approach with a fanfare.

Hatched Herself Out

"Oh, papa, I was caged once," said a little girl. "When I was visiting auntie in the country last summer I went into some bushes, and after a while I found I was caught. The bushes were so thick I couldn't get out."

"Well, how did you finally get out?"

"Oh," she replied, with a toss of her curly head, "I had a little hatchet and I hatched myself out."

SOCIAL TACTICS.

Showing How Good Society Is Helpful

There is a thirteen-year old boy in Cambridge who is a great "society man," and who is referred to by his friends as an authority on points of etiquette.

He was overheard one day giving some "pointers" to a boy about his age, but who had, apparently, none of his friend's aplomb. Boy No. 2, whom we will call Fred, was saying anxiously:

"But I never know what to say to a girl at a party. What do you talk about anyway?"

"Oh, that's easy enough," replied the society man. "First you say that it's a lovely night for a party; then you ask her if she doesn't think the rooms are a little warm."

"Yes?" interrogatively from Fred.

"Well, then, ask her if she is fond of waltzing; then—then—oh, say, that the floor is very slippery."

"Well, what next?"

"Oh!"—evidently a little strained—"tell her you like her step; then"—sudden interruption—"ask her if she doesn't want a glass of water; be a long time getting it, and by the time you get back some other man will be with her."—Boston Gazette.

A Good Sea Story.

An English lady, who visited America many years ago, used to tell the following story:

On the voyage, she was one day shocked by seeing a ship's officer knock down one of the crew, who was inclined to mutiny. So much did the sight affect her that she retreated to her state room, and did not again appear on deck until land was sighted.

Then she perceived at the wheel the man who had received the blow.

Approaching him she asked, with deep sympathy:

"How is your head now?"

"West-and-by-nor," was the answer.

Getting Around an Obstruction.

"Stevie," a bright four-year-old, had been told that he must not ask for anything to eat when visiting the neighbors.

Soon after, at the house of a distant relative, where he invariably found something to eat, he hung around with a wistful sort of a look, until finally he broke out:

"Aunt Jane, I'm awful thirsty."

"Are you?"

"Yes. I am so thirsty I could eat a doughnut."

The Boston Boy at School.

One boy was asked to define a common and a proper noun. He wrote:

Another was told to write what he had learned in physiology. He did, thus:

"The body is composed of three parts—the head, the trunk and the abdomen. The head contains the brains if you have any. The trunk contains the vowels and ribs. The abdomen contains the vowels, a, e, i, o, u and sometimes w and y."

What in the world that last bright boy was thinking of his teacher may have been able to puzzle out, but probably no one else can. The answer, however, was actual.—Boston Transcript.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at

Cure of Cancer and Ulcers.

Judge T. C. McLondon writes to the Swift Specific Co.: "About three years ago, Jerry Bradley had a cancerous sore on his face, near the right eye. It caused him a great deal of pain, and he lost the sight of the eye, but was finally cured by the use of Swift's Specific. This case is well known in Wilkes Co., Ga., where he lives."

Mr. L. Cox, of Arkabutla, Tate Co., Miss., writes: "I suffered a great deal from old ulcers for years. Your medicine was recommended, and after using six bottles I was completely cured. Your medicine does even more than you claim for it. I have known it to cure cases which were thought hopeless."

Mrs. A. M. Goldsmith, No. 674 Warren St., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I commenced using S. S. S. about three years ago. I had suffered from a sore throat for over a year. I used a great many other remedies with no good results. My little girl, also, had sore fingers, it commenced from the quick, and then the nails would come off. We doctored her for over two years, and when I commenced using S. S. S. I thought I would see what it would do for her. I am thankful to say that it entirely cured her. It is the best remedy I know of for the blood. I really believe it was the means of saving my life. The doctor told me I had a throat disease similar to Gen. Grant's. I cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from disordered blood."

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs. L. S. Pickerell of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

Best Nourishment for Consumptives.

Consumptive persons are said to be greatly benefited by the use of Speer's Port Grape Wine, both Fermented and Unfermented. It is a most nourishment when everything else fails. The rich properties of the wine derived from the iron in the soil on which the grapes grow makes new blood and it does not cure, we believe it prolongs life in many cases of consumption. In fact, cases have been reported perfect cures being effected by the use of Speer's Port Wine.

GOT THE BEST OF THE DOCTOR.

W. F. Boyer, Gardersville, Ohio, says: "My wife has been troubled with Catarrh a long time, but I have, with what the doctor could do, kept the upper hand of it until this fall, when everything failed. Her throat was raw as far as one could see, with an incessant cough, when I invested my dollar in a bottle of your Papillon Catarrh Cure as a last resort. To-day she is free from cough, throat all healed and entirely cured." Papillon Extract of flax Catarrh Cure effects cures when all others fail. Large bottles $1.00.

WEST FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

The regular meeting of this club, which was held at the residence of Mr. J. F. Smith, Aug. 24, was very [illegible]

an amusing recitation, relating a man's trials in "Putting up a Stovepipe." "The Engineer's Story," by Blanche Crittenden, very touchingly described how an engineer rescued a child from before his moving train. Song, "The Merry Chase," Clyde Smith; song, "Out on the Deep," M. D. Alexander. A recitation by Nellie Smith very laughably told how a young couple succeeded in entering the matrimonial state by paying the marriage fee with a bag of beans. An essay entitled, "The Raising of Small Fruits," was read by F. E. Bradley, who thought that more pains should be taken in the cultivation of fruit as it conduces to health. He preferred to plant strawberries on potato ground in the fall just after a rain, and thought the Concord grape, the Doughty raspberry, and the common red cherries to be the best for all purposes. Master F. Grey, Mr. Smith's [illegible] was named "Greenwood."

Owing to the lack of time it was the vote best to adjourn, and the discussion of the essay until the next meeting, which will be held at the residence of Mr. Fremont Lockhart, Friday evening, Sept. 21.

Refreshments passed to the pleasant lawn, and the wants of all were supplied with an abundance of ice cream and cake. Mr. Grey favored us with some more music, after which all returned to their homes feeling better for having been present.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Oh, that the God of rain would look propitiously upon our thirsty lands.

Our village school opens next week.

The Seventh-day Adventists after a few weeks sojourn in our town have thought well to pull up stakes and move off. They got no following, and have even left the dust behind them.

The W. C. T. U. will meet on Thursday this week with Mrs. Angie Knifflen. Tea will be served at six o'clock, P. M. A full attendance is desired, and all the honorary members are cordially invited.

John Underwood, long sick of Typhoid fever, is slowly recovering; but it is thought he is not yet out of danger.

Tuywood Belle Rupp have returned from their Monroe visit.—Happy as larks.

And what a boy in that family.—Born to Mr. and Mrs. Rupp, Monday, Aug. 27th, a ten pound boy.

Mrs. Ed. Punch of Monroe is visiting friends and relatives in this village.

Mr. [illegible] Leonardson and wife are visiting [illegible].

The Clarkville Base-Ball Nine played the Britton Second nine on Saturday. Result 11 to 5 in favor of Clarkville.

Last Saturday evening the Democrats had a large and enthusiastic meeting at the Exelby Hall.

We know but that the Republican ship will by and by pass this way and leave all other sailing crafts, however enthusiastic. The fact is not yet. Don't be prejudiced.

The Ridgeway township Prohibition Club will be addressed Saturday evening, Sept. 1st, at Exelby's Hall, Britton, by D. W. Grandon, Editor of the Adrian Leader. The Smith Robinson Glee Club of Monroe Co., will also be present and furnish some of the campaign songs for which they are becoming so popular.

THE FARMERS' ANNUAL GATHERING.

The 16th Annual Picnic Held at Beardsells Landing, Devils Lake—An Immense Crowd and a Good Program.

It was about 8:30 A. M. when the [illegible] Beardsell's dock last Thursday with the intention of doing the farmers' picnic. His purpose was to get there early and watch the crowd gather. Together with J. D. Smith, H. W. Stevens and James Aten the hospitality of Chas. Burridge's spacious, cottage at Cedar Point had been enjoyed and the steamer G. A. R. was boarded early in the morning for the picnic grounds.

A large crowd of people already filled the grounds at that early hour and a continuous stream of vehicles of every description poured into the grove until nearly eleven o'clock and at noon the immense throng was estimated at 20,000. It is certainly immense. There are people all the way from Beardsell's hotel to Oak Beach about three-quarters of a mile distant, a station on the new line of the C. J. & M. railroad. A few minutes walk brings you to the new village, which is intended to be a "future great." There are several streets laid out at right angles, lined with recently set out maple trees, and the buildings comprise nearly a dozen cottages and a newly erected store. A new depot is also being built and will be ready for occupancy in a few days. Here were found the dime museum man and the merry go-around waiting to rake in the shekels of the innocent excursionist as he alighted from the train. In the grove, between the hotel and the new speakers-stand are situated the usual number of peanut stands, auction wagons, cane racks, badge stands, wheel of fortune, and fakirs of every description all after the almighty dollar. The music of three brass bands—one each from Britton, Clayton and Addison—is alternately heard mingled with the rattle of the roller coaster, the shrieking of the steamboat whistles, and when the Manitou gets out a few yards other calliope whistle the noise is deafening. There are six steamers on the lake and they do a rushing business, for that day at least, running between the different landings loaded with passengers.

The long rows of tables in the grove are loaded with eatables at noon and the thousands of picnickers sit down to dispose of them in a manner that leaves no doubt as to the state of their appetite. After dinner the crowd disperses themselves on the seats in front of the speaker's stand to hear the exercises of the day.

It was one o'clock when Pres. Curtis of Hudson called the assembling to order and the City cornet band rendered some brass music. The exercises were opened by the Tiffin Valley Quartette singing the "Farmers' Boys" followed with prayer by H. J. Thier of Clayton. The minutes of the last meeting were read by D. T. Hall of this village in the absence of Secretary Mr. Wiggins, and were approved. After music by the band, President Curtis delivered his address of welcome.

Friends and neighbors, I greet you to-day with a hearty welcome at our 16th annual picnic. I trust we have met for a two-fold purpose, for a day of recreation and rest, also for improvement of the mind. Truly the harvest is past, or nearly so, and the summer is ended. A rich harvest has been ours, and now I trust with thankful hearts to the giver of all good we meet to-day to commune with neighbor, friend and brother and renew old friendship.

Little Pearl Curtis then recited a piece entitled, "The Deacon's Potatoes" which was greeted with shouts of applause. "Eggs for your breakfast in the morning" were served up by the Tiffin Valley Quartette in a musical and palatable style which was appreciated by all.

The address of the day was delivered by Mrs. Perry Mayo, of Battle Creek, an entertaining speaker of small stature, but large voice, and the audience listened intently throughout. She took for her subject "The Present Status of the American Farmer." Mrs. Mayo is a farmer's wife and said she had lived all her life on a farm and that honest toil, work, is one of the greatest boons God ever gave to humanity. She impressed upon the minds of the necessity of educating the children of the farmers to fit them to share in the legislation of the country, and also gave the monopolies a whack. The government should not give another foot of land except to actual settlers. Her remarks were frequently greeted with applause.

The quartette sang "The Harvest Moon" followed by a duet from Velta and Fannie Bump, entitled, "Sparkling Waters." "Humbugs and Swipdiers" was read by Miss Salsbury of Medina. The band played a selection and "The First Settler's Story" was read by Miss Belle Carson of Hudson. The Weston Glee club was called for and they rendered "The Jolly Old Farmer" and "Life is but a Strife."

President—S. W. Curtis, Hudson.

Vice Pres.—A. P. Crane, Pittsford.
Sec.—W. H. Wiggins, Adrian.
Treas.—L. A. Raymond, Rome.
Board of Directors—Adams, Hillsdale county, H. A. Graves; Moscow, Hillsdale, Chas. Mumford; Hudson, G. [illegible] Chase; Woodstock, Marion Carpenter; Cambridge, G. A. Blackmar; Rome, H. H. Ferguson; Dover, Jesse H. Warren; Seneca, A. Manchester; Adrian, C. Wilcox; Wright, Hillsdale, T. J. King; Ransom, Hillsdale, David Cramer; Pittsford, Hillsdale, J. B. Patterson; Wheatland, Hillsdale, J. K. Dillon; Somerset, Hillsdale, F. H. Smith; Madison, Calvin Crane; Jefferson, Hillsdale, L. Klingensmith.

During the exercises the Hudson Chaffs and Wolf Creeks engaged in ball game which resulted in a score of four to three in favor of the Creeks.

Tecumseh was not as largely represented as on former years, as no excursion train was run on the C. J. & M., and the regular trains did not allow time at the lake without staying over night. An excursion was talked of but no cars could be spared from the regulars.

"Nearly Everybody Reads It."

The Merchant reads the Chicago Daily News because he must know what's going on in the great business centres of the world, and he can't waste time hunting for it in a "blanket sheet."

The Farmer reads the Chicago Daily News because he makes more than $100 a year—one cent a day—by keeping promptly posted on the variations of the market,—he doesn't wait for the slow weeklies any more.

"The Mechanic reads the Chicago Daily News because he knows that even in matters of handicraft the more general intelligence a man has the more he'll earn. The workingman can well afford his daily paper at "one cent a day."

Grandfather reads the Chicago Daily News because it gives all the news, and yet so condensed that it doesn't tire him out to read it. And then, the print is so clear.

Mother reads the Chicago Daily News because she wants to keep up with her husband in general information, and then she particularly enjoys the household hints and things of special interest to women which are in it every day.

Grandmother reads the Chicago Daily News because she still wants to know what's going on. And it's a comfort to see a daily paper in the family that's clean and pure,—one she's not afraid to have "the children see."

The Boys all want the Chicago Daily News because it gives the base ball news so fully,—to say nothing of all the other things boys enjoy. And this year even the boys don't skip the political news.

The Politician always reads the Chicago Daily News because its an impartial paper, and whether he likes its independent views or not, he wants to know the truth. He "supports" his particular party "organ," but when he wants cold facts he reads the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

The Girls all read the Chicago Daily News because they're specially interested in its chatty gossips about fashions and home matters, to say nothing about the excellent serial story always running.

The Post Office Review, says: "Nearly everybody who reads the English language in, around and about Chicago, reads the Chicago Daily News." Do you? Its a "short and to the point paper,"—made particularly for busy people, and it costs one cent a day. All newsdealers sell it, and all postmasters forward subscriptions for it at $3.00 a year, or $1.00 for four months. Address

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

The hospitable home of David Brooks was the scene of a very happy event Wednesday evening, the marriage of his daughter Lizzie to Frank P. Ice of Mount Summit, Ind. Precisely at 7:30 the contracting parties preceded by John Brooks of St. Ignace, and Laura Clark, marched through the parlors and took their position beneath the wedding arch, where Rev. A. W. Stalker performed the ceremony, using the Episcopal service. Only the relatives and most intimate friends were present. The presents were not only numerous and costly but they were practical. After the usual congratulations came the customary refreshments, and then the happy couple were escorted to the depot. They went direct to their own home. While we shall miss Lizzie sadly here, we can but feel that the society there will appreciate and acknowledge her sterling qualities.

Their congressional convention for this district was also held in the afternoon and resulted in the nomination of Chas M. Fellows, of Washtenaw for congress. NATIONAL G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

The Twenty-second National Encampment will convene at Columbus, on Wednesday, Sept. 12th next. The grand parade will take place on Tuesday, Sept. 11th. THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

We beg leave to advise our readers to be sure and not forget to see the Panorama of the Battle of Gettysburg while in Chicago during the Exposition. Take advantage of the low rates and see Gettysburg. Perhaps there is no place in Chicago where an hour can be spent more profitably than at the Panorama of the Battle of Gettysburg, the fame of which has spread all over the West. From early morn until nearly midnight visitors go in and linger as they gaze at the landscape spread out before them, and then examine the details of "battle's magnificently stern array," portrayed with marvelous fidelity and startlingly real. There is no picture in the world like this of Gettysburg. No other panorama presents such a sweep of country, and no other presents nature arrayed in the garb of summer, with the summer sun producing the innumerable tints and the light and shade that lend to the scene a charm that is wanting in other paintings of this kind.

THE STATE FAIR AT JACKSON.

Those who attend the State Fair at Jackson this year, during the week commencing Sept. 10th, will be well repaid for their trouble. The entries and programme give promise of the finest exhibition in the history of the society. Jackson is of such convenient and easy access, that a trip which is often a great hardship in more distant parts of the State, is made at once inexpensive and pleasurable. The grounds are finely shaded and have been much improved since the last exposition. They are close to the depots, and good food and excellent water are in abundance on the grounds. Those who desire to do so will be enabled by the favorable running of trains to reach the city in good season in the morning, and return home at an early hour in the evening, thus saving the expense of hotel fares. If they wish to remain over night, they will be comfortably cared for at reasonable prices and see the best electrically lighted city in the United States.

Among the attractions at the fair grounds the State Agricultural College promises to occupy considerable space in different halls, displaying the work of its students in the mechanical course, and showing lathes and other machines in actual operation by the young men.

The Art Department promises to be one of great interest.

The Horticultural Department will be better patronized than in previous years.

The premiums are generous, and must fill every department with fine exhibits.

Farmers are earnestly invited to come and bring the produce of their farms and gardens. The live stock premiums offer attractions that they cannot overlook.

The special speed list of $2,500 will bring together a large aggregation of fine horses. This feature will be a great attraction in itself.

Aside from the fair, a look through the State Prison is always interesting, and the water works, fire department houses, electric lights works and some of the factories may be seen. An attempt will be made to give strangers an idea of the appearance of the city, by means of a collection of views in the main hall.

Arrangements have been made for three league games of ball to be played on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. It is hoped the people of the State will take a lively interest in the fair and make it the best ever held.

Jackson people will do all in their power to entertain those who come. Take a holiday and visit the State Fair.

THE SECOND DISTRICT.

In the second the choice has fallen on a sturdy and fearless champion—a man of force, convictions and popularity. Willard Stearns is known from one end of the district to the other. With voice and pen he has been a valiant advocate of the cause of democracy, and he will have the enthusiastic support of the democrats and greenbackers of the district. His nomination is a particularly fortunate one. It solidifies the union forces in the four counties, and it gives them an aggressive leader. Mr. Stearns was a soldier in the war, and his battle against the republicans since it closed has been of the unflinching kind. The district is a close one, but the margin, on a full vote, is on the side of the democrats and greenbackers; and Willard Stearns, who will make a plucky fight against any odds, is just the man to go in and win.—[Detroit Free Press.

A President on Brandy for Sickness.

The President of the Baltimore Medical College, Dr. Byrd, who has thoroughly tested Speer's wines, etc, says:

I have perscribed Speer's Port Grape Wine with marked and decidedly beneficial effects. I am prepared to bear testimony to the value of his Pedro J. Brandy, also, as a pure and valuable article in all cases of disease in which a reliable stimulant is required. I would be happy to feel that I was instrumental in inducing my fellow citizens to patronize these productions, to the exclusion of the foreign "doctored," and harmfully adulterated wines and brandies with which our people are often injured.

You Must Not Bust
A Trust,
James G. Blaine.

In the mammoth workingmen's parade at Chicago last week one of the banners had this inscription, "No Harrison in Ours." This is only a straw, but it shows which way the wind is setting.

Thurman's Port Huron speech which we published in full in last week's HERALD should be freely circulated among the people. It is a master piece of stump oratory. It equals the best efforts of Wm. H. Seward and Stephen A. Douglass when those men were in their prime. It deals some sledge hammer blows at the high tariff humbug.

In this last speech at Put-in-Bay, Gen. Harrison said that the taxes now imposed on the people were taken so indirectly and so subtly that they did not know they were being taxed at all. Great Scott, is Harrison coming out for revenue reform too? If the people fully realized how they were being robbed by the war tariff, it would produce a revolution in six months.

On Friday week the Democratic farmers living on the gravel road between Ann Arbor and Saline got together and raised 25 hickory poles and unfurled from the top of each a Cleveland and Thurman banner. A short speech was made at each place and the entire job was done up in one afternoon. A few years ago only two Democrats could be found on that road.

Harrison's "Burchard" seems to be no less an individual than Bro. Blaine himself. His declaration in favor of trusts in his Lewiston speech was an impromptu remark which the organs claim was hurridly said and should not be too strictly construed. But in a speech at Dover last week he read these words from a manuscript speech: "Trusts have no place in a national campaign. If there be evils connected with these trusts, the States must regulate them." In the name of common sense what national politics have we, if trusts are not a national issue?

Harvey Fisk & Son, bankers, are sending out a circular to the newspapers calling attention to "The Great Peril," the $132,000,000 surplus in the U. S. treasury. They advocate wiping out this surplus by the purchase of bonds. The administration has gone to the very verge of its legal authority already in the purchase of bonds. But after all the proper solution of the "surplus" question is not to have any surplus. The western farmers will solve that problem this fall by electing a Congress that will wipe out the war taxes. That is the Democratic plan of reducing the surplus.

Late advices from Europe indicate a failure in the wheat crop of England and France. England's crop will be 170,000,000 bushels short and that of France 80,000,000. The grain buying countries will need 370 million bushels and the grain exporting countries will only have 300 million surplus to supply this demand. The result will be to raise the price of wheat in the U. S. probably to one dollar per bushel. Now here's a chance for Bro. Blaine to point a political moral. The failure of the wheat crop in France is undoubtedly caused by the high tariff in America. With this premise as a text the "greatest living statesman" could elaborate a fine speech on the blessings which a protective tariff brings to the American farmer.

The Republican candidate for Governor of New York, Warner Miller, made a immense fortune out of the tariff on wood pulp. In other words he got rich by plundering the newspapers. The editor of a country newspaper has to pay his share of the tariff plunder. But how do the re-Republican editors relish the idea of voting for such a man for governor?

Everybody is congratulating himself that the Republicans succeeded in keeping the Senate squarely on the dividing line between wind and water. The honest Democrats in the Senate were going to put the President in a locality by repealing the fishery treaty, but they and themselves not only in a hole, but pretty effectually buried. They hardly know how to meet the challenge. Don't hurry them. Give them time to dig out and gather themselves together.

BOGUS BUTTER.

SHALL THE LAW THAT PROTECTS FARMERS BE REPEALED?—THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM AGAINST DAIRY FARMERS.

How Cleveland Guards the Rights of America's Greatest Industry—Facts that Interest Honest Producers and Every Consumer of Dairy Produce.

The farmers of the United States have a peculiarly important special interest in the defeat of the Republican party at the approaching election. With reference to internal taxation, that platform says: "We favor the entire repeal of all internal revenue taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system."

This plank declares not merely for the repeal of the whisky tax in preference to interference with tariff taxes, but for the abolition of all internal revenue taxes, including that on oleomargarine. The law for a tax on oleomargarine or bogus butter was enacted in 1886, and was approved by President Cleveland on August 2d of that year.

A BENEFICENT TAX OF PEACE.

It is, therefore, not a war tax but a peace tax. The declared purpose of the law was to protect the farmers of the United States against the fraudulent competition of bogus butter sold under the brands of genuine dairy produce. The act was passed on the urgent recommendation of the agricultural associations of the country, and the President filed with the copy of the new law, signed by him, the following memorandum:

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S REASONS.

"It has been urged as an objection to this measure that, while purporting to be legislation for revenue, its real purpose is to destroy by the use of the taxing powers, one industry of our people for the benefit and protection of another. If entitled to indulge in such a suspicion as a basis of official action in this case, and if entirely satisfied that the consequences indicated would ensue, I should without doubt feel constrained to interpose Executive dissent. But I do not feel called upon to interpret the motives of Congress otherwise than by the apparent character of the bill which has been presented to me, and I am convinced that the taxes which it creates cannot possibly destroy the open and legitimate manufacture and sale of the thing upon which it is levied. If this article has the merit that its friends claim for it, and if the people of the land, with full knowledge of its real character, desire to purchase and use it, the taxes exacted by this bill will permit a fair profit to both manufacturer and seller. If the existence of the commodity taxed and the profits of its manufacture and sale depend upon disposing of it to the people for something else which it deceitfully imitates, the entire enterprise is a fraud and not an industry, and if it cannot endure the exhibition of its real character, which will be affected by the inspection, supervision and stamping which this bill directs, the sooner it is destroyed the better, in the interest of fair dealing.

"Such a result would not furnish the first instance in the history of legislation in which a revenue bill produced a benefit which was merely incidental to its main purpose. There is certainly no industry better entitled to the incidental advantages which may follow this legislation than our farming and dairy interests, and to none of our people should they be less begrudged than our farmers and dairymen. The present depression of their occupations, the hard, steady and often unremunerative toil which such occupations exact, and the burdens of taxation which our agriculturists necessarily bear, entitle them to every legitimate consideration.

"Nor should there be opposition to the incidental effect of this legislation on the part of those who profess to be engaged honestly and fairly in the manufacture and sale of a wholesome and valuable article of food, which by its provisions may be subject to taxation. As long as their business is carried on under cover and by false pretenses, such men have bad companions in those whose manufactures, however vile and hurtful, take their place without challenge with the better sort in a common crusade of deceit against the public. But if this occupation and its method are forced into the light, and all these manufactures must either stand upon their merits or fall, the good and bad must soon part company, and the fittest only will survive."

FAVORED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Commissioner of Agriculture united earnestly in a request for the passage of the bill and stated the necessity for it as a measure of protection, and the farming interests in a communication which included the following passages:

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

"There are from four to five million American citizens engaged in dairying business, and they must all abandon it and be driven into some other already overworked branch of industry, unless they can be relieved from the oppressive ruinous competition with cheap imitations of butter and cheese. Such legislation is necessary because the States have not been able so far to either suppress or properly control the great evil of which I have spoken, and as a sufficient remedy can be found nowhere, in my judgment, save under the federal government."

The strongest possible efforts were made to induce the President to veto the bill. The most ingenious attorneys were employed, and the shield of the Constitution was invoked to protect those who were imitating farmers' products and depriving them of their legitimate and hard earned profit. But Cleveland, as usual, took the people's side.

CLEVELAND STANDS BY THE FARMERS.

He stood by the farming interest, and, after the act was signed, gave personal attention to the manner of its execution in his anxiety that the farmers should be saved from loss.

This admirable law, which affords true protection to American labor, caused an increase in the sales of dairy farmers of the country in one year to the extent of $25,000,000, and in the state of New York alone the difference was $2,500,000.

The Republican platform asks that this tax be repealed, and that no less than $25,000,000 per year be taken out of the pockets of the dairy farmers of the United States by those who use fat, offal, cotton seed oil, and all manner of disgusting refuse to make what they would like to sell under the names of butter and cheese.

HOW DAIRY FARMERS ARE PROTECTED.

The national law does not simply enact that the farmers shall be protected; it provides just how the protection shall be carried out. The internal revenue system afforded the necessary machinery, and the same methods of supervision and accounting are made applicable to the bogus butter factories as to the whisky distilleries. The product of every factory is branded for just what it is, and heavy special taxes are imposed on the manufacturers of the vile stuff to insure a full return of their products. The government of the United States also watched these factories, and it is well-known that so complete has been the enforcement of this farmers' benefit tax that no considerable evasion of it occurs. The 7,000,000 farmers of the country have all some interest in this subject. The value of the dairy products of the United States is over $600,000,000 per year. If the bogus butter competition had been allowed to go on unchecked by federal law this great production would have been so reduced that all engaged in it would have experienced constant loss, and it is entirely probable that the business of manufacturing honest butter and cheese on a large scale would have been driven out of the country.

THE INFLUENCE OF HORATIO SEYMOUR.

It was natural for Cleveland to take the side of the farmers in this fight to protect their rights and property. As a young New York democrat, he was the pupil of Horatio Seymour, who was always looked to as the great champion of the dairy interests of the United States. He had learned from Seymour, and from participation in agricultural movements within the State, all about the great dairy business of the country; and those who went to him to argue against his approval of the bill found him so well informed as to the interests of the farmers, and so determined that no imposition upon them should be allowed to prevail, that they considered him very prejudiced. It was predicted that the law would never be enforced. But the President was determined that it should be enforced, and it has been.

FEDERAL PROTECTION NECESSARY.

Some State laws have been passed to regulate the manufacture of bogus butter, but none of them were effective in protecting the farming interests until the national statute went into force. Nor could any State law afford the needed protection to the hard working farmers. The goods made in one State could be sold in another. The dealer in bogus butter in New York could freely handle falsely branded Massachusetts goods without much risk of detection or exposure. It was necessary to stop the evil at the fountain head, that is, at the factories, and to apply the remedy uniformly and simultaneously all over the United States. To accomplish this a national law was essential, just as Cleveland said it was when he signed the bill.

SOUND VIEWS.

"Grave public questions confront us. There is a large, perilous, and increasing surplus in the revenue. It must be removed, not by needless and extravagant expenditures, not by abolishing the proper taxing of whiskey and tobacco, not by a stupid horizontal reduction for politics only; but by plain business methods, by freeing entirely those great necessaries of life that enter into the daily consumption of every household, and by wise and discriminating reductions, which will not only relieve the tax payer, but will also encourage labor, and aid industry, and extend our commerce."

These are not the words of the President, nor of any one of "that element which sought to destroy this nation." They are the words of Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, chairman of the Republican Committee of Massachusetts in 1884, and they were spoken in calling the State Convention to order.

"There are only two ways to reduce the surplus revenue; one by raising the tariff to a prohibitory height which nobody advocates, the other, the free list. The method is the honest reformer's hope."

These, again, are not the words of President Cleveland, but of ex Governor Long, of Massachusetts, a Republican leader in that State.

"Any tax or import duty which increases the price of these raw materials is a burden upon these skilled artizans and mechanics, or else a burden upon the consumers of their products."

Was not Mr. Mills of Texas, who was right, but Mr. Allison, of Iowa, in 1870, who cried a general redemption of twenty per cent., when he declared would not be "to him equivalent for the removal of all internal taxes on manufactures."

"We want all those articles that enter as raw materials into the manufactures of the country free of duty, so that the country can stand on an equality in the markets of the world with the other nations of the world."

No, this is not Speaker Carlisle, but Senator Henry Wilson, and the same views were so universally accepted by the Republican party up to its Convention of 1884 that the Chicago Tribune, which supports the Republican nominations, "spits upon the platform" of this year as abandoning in its tariff plank the Republican doctrine. That platform declares that the party, rather than yield a single protective tax, would abandon what Mr. Lodge approved—the proper taxing of whiskey and tobacco. It would engage in what he calls needless and extravagant expenditures. It would refuse to free the great necessaries of life that enter into the daily consumption of every household. It would refuse wise and discriminating reductions which would not only relieve the tax payer, but encourage labor, aid and strengthen industry, and extend our commerce; and Mr. Lodge, despite his words in 1884, would now help to do it.

But if his words and those of the other Republican leaders were true when they were spoken, they are true now. They declare principles of taxation and economy, and those principles have not changed. Unless Mr. Lodge and Governor Long and Mr. Allison and Preident Garfield and Vice-President Wilson and other Republican leaders were free-traders, Mr. Cleveland is not a free-trader. Unless Mr. Lodge and his friends demanded free-trade in 1884, the friends of Mr. Cleveland do not demand free-trade in 1888. Unless the Republican leaders were willing in 1884 to ruin American industry for the benefit of British free-trade, the President and his supporters are not willing to effect that ruin in 1888. It is plain that if the President's message and the Mills bill are the beginning of free-trade, the stanchest Republicans began it before them. It is Republicans who expose the folly of their own cry of free-trade against the Democrats in the present campaign. In speaking of the ratification meeting in Boston some time ago, the Springfield Republican put the situation tersely when it said:

"It was little more than thirty years ago that Henry Wilson, Charles Sumner, and other Representatives of Massachusetts in Congress spoke and voted in favor of reducing an average twenty-five per cent. tariff to one of eighteen and twenty per cent. Their political descendants last night at Boston denounced the proposed reduction of a forty-seven per cent. tariff to forty-two per cent. as meaning free-trade."

"The people of this country, sir," said an impassioned, orator "are not a fool."—Harper's Weekly.

For over twenty years I have been a great sufferer from the effects of a diseased stomach, and for three years past have been unable to do any business, hardly able to move about. Two years ago my case was pronounced by the best medical skill in Detroit incurable. I visited different water cures and tried different climates, but to no good. Caught in the Crash.

Seven Firemen Go Where Death Awaits Them.

BURIED IN THE BURNING DEBRIS.

One Man's Eye Torn Out—A Loss of $1,000,000—Frightful Fate of Three Men in an Oil Fire—Death in a Blazing Wisconsin Hotel—A Terrible Scene of Panic—Peril on Board a Burning Ship—The Arkansas Cloud Burst.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 3.—One of the most disastrous fires, both to life and property, that has occurred in this city for many years broke out at 4:30 yesterday morning at 109 South Sharp street, and spreading rapidly on either side destroyed seven fine four-story iron and brick front buildings on Sharp street, and the back buildings of nearly the whole row of houses on Pratt street between Sharp and Hanover.

The north wall of building 109 Sharp street collapsed about 5:30 a. m., and buried nine firemen. Two of them—Al. Eck and John Kelly—were taken out alive, but very badly injured. Seven were killed. Their names are: George Bowers, Thomas Wagner, Perry Ryan and John Acomb of No. 2 Truck company, and Harry Walker, James McFee, and George Kerins, of No. 7 Engine company.

The losses will aggregate about $1,000,000, upon which there is an estimated insurance of $800,000. The heaviest losses fall upon John King, president of the Erie Railway company; Edward A. Prior & Co., J. H. Winkelman & Co., M. S. Levy & Son, Dobbs, Mudge & Co., Tabb Bros. & Dimmock, Henry S. King & Sons.

The fire continued until about 11 o'clock, when it was gotten under control. The buildings on Sharp street from 105 to 117 were swept clean, nothing being left standing except the fronts. The rear building of the "Maternite," on Lombard street, was torn down to prevent the fire from spreading further. The inmates of the institution were all removed quietly.

The firms of Tabb Bros. & Dimmock and Prior & Co. had large supplies of gun and revolver cartridges in stock. About 5:30 a. m. they began to explode, and for a quarter of an hour kept up a fusillade, the bullets going through the windows on all sides, but fortunately nobody was shot, with the exception of one man, who was slightly wounded near the left eye.

Shortly before 6 a. m. the members of No. 7 engine company and No. 2 truck entered Tabb Bros.' building, intending to cut holes through to No. 109. Those in the street saw that the side wall of No. 109 was beginning to sway and called to them to come out. All of them were hastening out, when the treacherous wall fell over and crashing through the floors of No. 107, buried the unfortunate firemen under its great weight. Then all efforts were concentrated upon the pile of ruins under which nine human beings were writhing in torture. The groans of the men could be heard from within this living volcanic tomb, for it had now taken fire and was belching forth jets of flame. Half a dozen strong streams were turned on the pile, and the flames within were in a short time subdued. In a few minutes John Kelly was rescued. His left eye was burnt out of its socket, and his head badly mashed, but the surgeons say he will recover. Then Al Eck was dragged from the ruins. His right arm was broken and his side badly injured. The others, however, were beyond hope, and their dead bodies were taken out one by one, all mangled torn and burnt, the last one being recovered late last night. All of the seven dead firemen, whose names are given above, leave families to mourn their untimely end, except Harry Walker, who was a single man.

CREMATED BY COAL OIL.

Nothing but the Charred Bones of Three Men Found After the Fire.

FINDLAY, O., Sept. 3.—Three men were roasted alive in the burning of an immense oil tank belonging to the Buckeye pump-line, at Oil Center, twelve miles from this place, early Saturday morning. When the men went to work it was noticed that the tank was leaking, and a force was immediately set to work to repair the damage. Several of the men were at work at the top of the tank and others at its base, when the sides suddenly fell in, carrying the men with them. The vat at the time contained 20,000 barrels of oil, and this poured fourth in all directions, carrying the men with it and rushing onward with such force that they were unable to escape. A ditch some feet deep temporarily checked the flow of oil and all but three of the men had succeeded in escaping, when the petroleum suddenly caught fire from a forge.

In a moment the entire mass was blazing fiercely, while from the midst of it the shrieks and cries for help of the three doomed men could be plainly heard. It was impossible to afford them any aid, the only thing the spectators could do being to build temporary dams and big ditches to lead the blazing oil away from the sixty-three other tanks which were scattered around. In this they were successful. It was at first thought that at least ten men had lost their lives, but a roll call of the employes showed that only three—James P. East, Charles Grace and Rembrandt Ransom—had lost their lives. The bodies of the men were recovered some time after the accident, nothing being left but the bones, which crumbled away when the searching party endeavored to pick them up.

The skeletons of a number of animals, which were also cremated in the blazing flood, were also found. The flames continued to burn with fearful strength during the entire day, immense clouds of dense smoke extending over the sky so that they nearly overhung this city. Late Saturday evening the burning oil began to creep dangerously near the other tanks, each of which has a capacity of 20,000 barrels, and gangs of men were hastily sent from Lima and this city to aid in subduing the flames.

ON BOARD A BURNING SHIP.

An All-Night Fight with Fire—Excitement Among the Passengers.

NORWICH, Conn., Sept. 3.—The trip of the freight steamboat City of Lawrence, of the Norwich & New York Transportation line, from New York to this city, was one of peril and excitement. The boat carried twenty-five or thirty passengers. At 8 p. m. fire was discovered in the forward part of the vessel among 200 bales of cotton, and it seemed at times as though the crew could not successfully cope with it. The excitement was intense, and all the passengers had equipped themselves with life preservers. The crew struggled with the flames until the vessel reached her dock in this city at 6 o'clock a. m. The damage to the boat was slight. The cause of the fire is attributed to spontaneous combustion.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Sept. 3.—While one of Forepaugh's tigers was being transferred from one cage to another Saturday morning he fell off the ladder. He gave a great howl and the attendants became panic-stricken. Six men, in trying to get out of the way, were trampled on by the crowd and were badly injured. By presence of mind the tamer of the beast succeeded in muzzling the animal before he could get away.

HOT SPRINGS FLOODED.

A Deluge Sweeps the Town With Great Havoc.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Sept. 1.—This city was visited by a most disastrous rainstorm Thursday night, which struck the valley about midnight, and continued until after 1 o'clock. The principal thoroughfares were soon converted into running rivers, and houses, walks, crossings and everything movable were swept away. A negro man on Magnolia street lost his wife and two children when his residence was swept away. The bodies of his wife and one child have been recovered. A negro woman, a cook, is missing. A white woman named Charlotte Harrison met her death by drowning when the waters swept her residence away. The body of an unknown man was found yesterday afternoon below the city. The streets are filled with debris. The floors in the office of the Arlington hotel, and three stores along Central avenue were inundated to a depth of four feet. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Sept. 3.—An investigation shows that the damage wrought by the cloud-burst in the Hot Springs valley was greater than at first believed. Every house along Central avenue for a mile was washed from its foundations, and the sidewalks and bridges are a total wreck. The entire valley was submerged, and the wonder is that only six persons were drowned. The bathhouses have all been damaged. The names of the persons who lost their lives so far as is known are as follows: Mrs. Millie Fletcher, Ada Fletcher, Willie Fletcher and Mrs. Charlotte Harrison.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Sept. 3.—The disastrous and fatal waterspout which visited this city last Thursday night broke at Palarm, twenty miles west of here, discharging an immense amount of water, and sweeping the country bare. No lives were lost.

A HOTEL HOLOCAUST.

Three Charred Bodies Found in the Ruins of a Wisconsin Hotel.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Sept. 3.—Fire was discovered in the American house, on the corner of Third and Tower avenues, about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Very soon the hook and ladder company and hose companies were at the scene, and four streams were turned on the fire. Before this could be done, however, the building was enveloped in flames, and the screams of frantic men and women escaping from the burning building, some in only their nightclothes, lent horror to the scene. The charred bodies of three men were found during the morning, one of which is supposed to be that of Paul Claire, a Canadian. The others have not been identified. One man carried the prostrate form of his bedfellow, whom he was unable to arouse, out of the burning hotel and laid him down. The fellow suddenly realized the situation, and, with a wild yell, rushed away. The girls who were employed at the hotel were so panic-stricken that it was with difficulty they were got out of the doomed hotel. There were many miraculous escapes.

TWO TERRIFIC BOILER EXPLOSIONS.

Two Men Instantly Killed and Another Wounded—Six Killed at Nashville.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Sept. 1.—A terrific explosion of a boiler at a saw-mill near Sherman, nine miles northwest of here, occurred at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon, killing Noah M. Rickard and William M. Mratin instantly, and fatally wounding William Yocum. The men belonged to old and respected families of Sangamon county. Rickard was blown nearly 200 yards into an elm tree, and his body was literally torn to pieces. He leaves a widow and three children. Martin was blown about 100 yards, but his body was not so badly mutilated. He was about 22 years old, and lived with his aunt, Mrs. Samuel Bennett, near Sherman. Two other men were within feet of the boiler at the time of the explosion, but were uninjured. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 4.—A special to The American from Chattanooga, Tenn., says: At 6:30 o'clock yesterday morning the boiler of the Perry Stove-works, at South Pittsburg, Tenn., exploded, instantly killing Charles Taylor, the superintendent of the works; J. R. Mills, a machinist; M. Donovan, foreman of the mounting department; George M. Carter, a leading jeweler of the town; William Plumblee, of Winchester, Tenn., and William Watson, a moulder. William Gross, a machinist, and Rock Scruggs, a moulder, were both fatally hurt, and will die. A large piece of the boiler was thrown end over end a distance of 100 yards, and, tearing a hole through the side of Dietzen's store, landed against the opposite wall. Many smaller pieces were thrown a distance of several hundred yards.

A Brutal Negro Executed.

HOUSTON, Tex., Sept. 1.—At 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon Burk Mitchell, a negro uxoricide, was hanged. The crime for which Mitchell was executed was one of the most brutal known in the annals of crime in Texas. He claimed that his wife was unfaithful and meeting her on Rusk street under the eaves of the Baptist church, accused her of adultery and stabbed her several times in the head and neck with a long, keen bladed knife. Failing to dispatch her with the knife, the desperate brute grabbed a long-handled shovel and beat the brains of the unfortunate woman into a pulp. He was arrested after a desperate resistance. Several attempts were made to lynch him, but Sheriff Ellis stood the crowd off and landed him safely in jail.

CABIN SCENE IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Maiden Who Wanted To Marry the Newspaper Man under the Shadows of Bald Mountain.

After proceeding about a mile and a half we reached the spot where the mill was to be located, and half a mile away was Dawson's cabin.

Dawson was a moonshiner. His family consisted of wife and three children, the oldest being a bare-footed, bare-legged girl of 16.

After being introduced, I was left to pass a couple of hours while Dawson returned to the men. He had explained to his wife who I was and what had happened, but the children were full of curiosity.

As I sat by the door smoking, the girl, who was called Deb, sat down beside me and asked:

"Stranger, did you lope it?" (come on foot).

"Yes."

"A mile or a sot-down?"

"More'n that. About a dozen flop-ups."

A "sot-down" means half a day's travel. A "flop-up" means a day's tramp. At bed-time the head of the house would say to the children:

"Come now, you'uns, it's flop-up time."

The girl looked at me in great surprise, and presently asked:

"You didn't come to shoot pop, 'cause if ye had you'd hev chucked (ambushed) him."

"No; I came to see you."

"Mam!—oh, mam!" she cried, "come out yere! Jist hear he'un talkin'!"

"What does he'un say?" asked the mother as she came out with her pipe and sat down.

"He's honey! I dun tole ye when that wish bone fell down that he'un was comin'. Hip! Hain't he'un nice, ma?"

"He's honey, fur shore," said the mother, after glancing at me. "But he'un must ax pop fur yer. Can't go onless pop says so. Say, stranger, did ye come to take Deb away? Did somebody tell ye we wanted her to get mar'd?"

"No. I fell in with your husband and his friends on the road and he asked me to stop over night."

"Hip! And you'un don't want to marry me?" shouted Deb.

"I—I can't, my child."

"Mebbe ye'un is forwardly (already) jined?" querited the mother.

"Yes."

"Hip! and I sot sich store by he'un!" wailed Deb, as she sat down and began to cry.

"Now, Deb, you shet!" scolded the mother. "If he'un is forwardly jined, how kin he be jined agin? 'Taint in natur, you know."

"He'un had no call (business) to be jined!" sobbed Deb.

"Pore chile!" sighed the mother. "Deb's increased (very smart) for her aige, stranger. She's look'n higher'n most gals fur a husband. She doan' keer two twinkles fur nobody 'round yere."

"Oh, well, she's smart and good-looking, and she'll find a nice husband."

"Hip! Ar' ye truthin?" exclaimed the girl as she sprang up. "And I'll git mar'd?"

"Yes."

"And have a real house?"

"Yes."

"And a real dress and bonnet?"

"Yes."

"And a gold ring?"

"Yes."

"Oh, mam! hear him! hear him! Hip! I can't sot still. Jist think of it, mam!"

"I'm a thinkin', Deb, and I know he's truthing. Lor' bless him fur his goodness to us poor shuckless folkses."—Detroit Free Press.

TO MAKE KOUMISS.

The Way of Manufacturing It in Its Most Renowned Perfection.

The Bashkirs of Russia are renowned for their skill in making koumiss, or fermented mare's milk, which is now extensively consumed by patients suffering from dyspeptic and wasting diseases and so easy is it of digestion that invalids drink ten, fifteen, and occasionally even twenty champagne bottles a day, while a Bashkir is able to overcome a couple of gallons at a sitting, and in an hour or two be ready for more.

To insure good koumiss it is essential that the mares be of the steppe breed, and fed on steppe pasture. They are milked from four to eight times a day, the foal being kept apart from the mother, and allowed to suck only in the night time.

The mare will not give her milk, however, unless at the time of milking her foal is brought to her side, when such is the joy of reunion that after sundry acts of loving and smelling and kissing, the maternal feeling shows itself by her sometimes giving milk from both nipples at once.

Milking is done by the Bashkir women, who, taking a position close to the hind legs of the mare, rest on one knee and on the other support a pail directly under the udder, pulling at each nipple in turn, and receiving from three to four pints each time of milking.

To make koumiss the milk is beaten up in a churn (but not sufficiently to produce butter), and by fermentation is converted after twenty-four hours into weak koumiss, from which condition after twelve hours more it passes into a medium degree of strength, while strong koumiss is produced by assiduous agitation of the milk for two or three days, and it is then said to be slightly intoxicating.

SALT DUST OF THE SEA.

Disagreeable Fact.

While voyaging from Australia to New Zealand, one of the passengers, a lady, complained that the dust of the sea caused her eyes to smart, and had also soiled her clothing. She was laughed at by the other passengers, who insisted that there could be no dust at sea.

"They were mistaken," says Mr. M. M. Ballou, who tells the incident in a book of travel. "There is a salt dust which rises from the spray and impregnates everything, even filling one's mouth with a saline taste.

"While the sun shines, this deposit, like the dew on land, is less active and perceptible; but to walk the deck at night is to become covered with a thin coating of salt dust so fine as to be hardly noticeable, but which in time becomes sufficiently crystallized to be obvious to the eye.

"The dust of the sea is no fable. The officer who stands his night-watch on the bridge will testify to this fact, and the cabin steward will tell you that he has often to resort to something more potent than a whisk-broom to cleanse clothing which has been exposed to sea dust."

Greatly Excited.

Not a few of the citizens of Tecumseh have recently become greatly excited over the astounding facts, that several of their friends who had been pronounced by their physicians as incurable and beyond all hope—suffering with dreaded monster Consumption—have been completely cured by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, the only remedy that does positively cure all throat and lung diseases, Coughs, Colds, asthma and Bronchitis.

Out of the Breastworks.

TATE SPRINGS, TENN., July 4, 1888.
The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:
Gentlemen—Seven years ago I contracted an exceedingly bad case of blood poison. I tried a physician, the best at command, but secured no benefit. My throat began to get sore, and my body covered with sores and ulcers. Going from bad to worse, I felt that my grave must be reached in the near future. I gave up the doctors' treatment, and with a despairing hope I commenced taking your medicine. I began to improve from the first bottle, and in a short time the ulcers healed, and my skin cleared off and was entirely well.
One year ago a case of catarrh developed in my system. The physician did his best, but could not cure me; but two bottles of Swift's Specific gave me permanent relief.

Prohibition
Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.

The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, newsy and piquant, bristling with telling points, brief, clear, sprightly, candid, earnest, convincing, fair, dispassionate, full of ringing facts and bright with sterling truths.
It popularizes the burning question of "Prohibition," brings it down to every mind and consciences, marshals its many startling facts in new and surprising forms, clarifies and invigorates its logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whate'er it touches. Cloth $1.00. Paper 50 cts. Supplied by Agents, Booksellers and News Dealers, or mailed postpaid to any address by

PIONEER DAYS IN LENAWEE COUNTY.

Address of Francis A. Dewey. August 15th, at Grange Hall, Madison.

It brings to mind many pleasant remembrances when we review scenes of forty or fifty years ago. The pioneer period has justly been termed the heroic age; and many who are here to-day will remember it was a period of great labor and of heroic endurance, privation and suffering with the fever and ague and many other complaints, which enterprising families must always go through with before the forest is cleared away or the beautiful fields laid out and cultivated. With what ambition the new settler struggled on, until a house was erected, a small clearing made and planted. How patiently they waited for the first crop to grow, when they could harvest from their own independent plantation. How cheerfully they labored, longing for the good time to come when the fertile fields would yield a rich and bountiful crop of corn, oats, wheat and potatoes. Also with neighbors, school houses, churches and good roads. The first settlers will remember the fatiguing times of getting over the newly cut out roads to get on the land where the log house was to be built for the new forest home.

In out short memorial we will refer back to the Massachusetts coast, when those dauntless sailors with the stanch British ship called the Mayflower landed the first genuine civilized pioneers, who assisted to clear up and settle the New England States. Men and women of undaunted perseverance. We are glad to say a large share of the citizens of this county were from the stock of the eastern states.

The one who now addresses you, when a boy sixteen years of age, left Hanover, in the State of New Hampshire, for the western country. After thirty days steady plodding over the road reached the village of Buffalo, where a stop was made for two years. The Indian reservation was but one mile from the main street of Buffalo. The primitive wigwam of the Chief of the Seneca tribe of Indians, Red Jacket, I often visited in his ancient and true Indian home. Also while in Buffalo attended one summer Captain McKays military academy as a tenor drummer for the institution. Also learned a little of the nautical art of sailing on the lake. In the year 1829 left Buffalo on foot and alone for the wild west, Michigan. After a long and lonesome journey through Pennsylvania and Ohio, full twenty five days' walk, reached the primitive settlement at Tecumseh. There was not an acquaintance or relative of mine in Michigan, but soon learned generous and kind friends, and am glad to say this fertile county has been my home for the last 59 years. With cherished good will can say we have known what it is to camp out and sleep in the woods for weeks at a time, also some days with short rations. But have never seen the time to lounge around as a loafer, for there was plenty of work to be done and no end to improvement, and well merited success which shows progression.—After six years work at various occupations, with a large share of the time employed in transporting the U. S. mails through the unsurpassed natural scenery of the wild forest roads. With all the varied experiences in that time earned a few dollars and bought lands in Cambridge on, four sections, at $1 25 an acre. In the year 1836 was married and shortly after built a log house on my land, which bordered for nearly a mile on a meandered lake. Here was my romantic home, over two miles from any road, and more than a mile to the nearest house, except a few Indian wigwams, one occupied by an imperial Chief. In the surroundings there was a variety of wild animals, with birds of beautiful plumage in their own native haunts. Also on the crystal waters were ducks, loons, geese and swans, and in the waters were thousands of fish. My small plantation adjoining with such a native company around, all independent it made a paradise, with thousands of enjoyments. With only two in our retreat we had no reason to complain of the solitude, for it was our own. As time rolled on roads were made, neighbors settled around us, school house was built with many admired improvements.

And not the least of our thankfulness in the prospective review at our own home, we look with pride and cheerful good will on seven trim, healthy boys and one girl, who are the favored citizens of Michigan.—Now as we look over this county it can be truly said the early settlers hopes and wishes are more than realized in the many beautiful and admired improvements; in full view of the thousands of elegant and cherished homes that everywhere dot this recently homeless waste. We have seen the wilderness cleared away by the woodman's axe, the lonely trail through the dense forest quickly obliterated and in its place magnificent railroads that span the entire state, which carry our products to every part of the globe. And the palace cars carry passengers over the states with more speed than the eagle flies. Fifty years ago we wrote with quill pen to friends in the east, and waited months for an answer. Now we can touch the electric wire and back flashes the reply, under the broad Atlantic or over the vast country and the Rocky mountains inside of half an hour. Also the telephone, sending your natural voice to a friend full 40 miles away. It is a grand and noble pleasure to know that these stately improvements and scientific works of art and enterprise were accomplished in our memory. We can say with propriety, in the language of the prophets, the wilderness and the solitary places shall blossom as the rose.

In my rambling remarks I wish to refer back to the year 1824. March 4 the first land was bought in this county; June 2 Musgrove Evans with his family of six made first settlement at Tecumseh; same year Mr. Evans was appointed postmaster. The first school was taught by Mrs. Mary Brown Spafford, wife of George Spafford, in the years 1824-25. The first saw mill was built in 1825, the first grist mill in 1826, first meeting house at the Raisin Valley in 1827, the first court house in 1829; all the above at Tecumseh

In my hasty historic notes I wish to say a few words of my long ago respected friend, Musgrove Evans, who was the first settler of this county, and led the way into the forest 25 miles from any inhabitant or any road. He was a man of good common school education, of vigorous intellectual and physical constitution, with no affectation of dignity. He commanded respect and was a social force of marked and permanent benefit for all the first settlers. Strictly temperate in all his ways and management, not even using tobacco in any form. He was systematized in the farming occupation, also of the senior class in practical surveying. In the year 1825 Mr. Evans surveyed with Orange M. Risdon the U. S. military road from Detroit to Chicago, which was a long and perilous tramp of about two months. Also in the year 1832 Mr. E. surveyed the U. S. military road from LaPleasance bay, Monroe, to intersect the Chicago road at Cambridge. On that road I was an assistant. Furthermore it was my good fortune 58 years ago to be a boarder with that most excellent family of Mr. Evans for one year, where I learned much about the primitive settlement. Mr. Evans died at Cypress Creek, Texas, June 7, 1855.

According to my record there are but two now living who came here in the year 1824, viz.: Mrs. Cynthia Spafford Tilton and her sister, Mrs. Harriet Spafford Webster; both reside at Tecumseh. Shall we omit to say one word of the many friends and pioneers who have left us and gone down to the silent tomb. Those strong men with cheerful and undaunted wives! They bore the cold and heat and burden of former days, to enjoy what we do at this time. To them we say all honor; by their industry they have made an indelible mark, a monument in clearing the lands, building the towns and cities, which will be lasting until time is no more.

In conclusion will say, closing this brief outline of diversity, in our opinion the present is the best we ever had; the hours of labor have been reduced from fourteen to eight hours a day; our wages are doubled; the necessaries of life are much cheaper. We congratulate with thousands that the great curse of the world, drunkenness, is much diminished. We live in better houses and are better clothed, with the lasting advantage of a good school education in the reach of every child of Michigan. If I am not mistaken, one of the most able historians of this age said: "I have lived longer than Methuselah, for he never in his long journey between the cradle and the grave saw such changes as we have lived to see and witness."

A few words more and my primitive notes are finished. Sixteen years ago the county pioneer society was organized; for the last fourteen years I have been its presiding officer, and also have attended every special and annual meeting of the county but one. Also have been an officer of the State Pioneer and Historical Society from its commencement fourteen years ago. With pleasure say that when the new State Capitol was building at Lansing two large rooms of this building were assigned to the pioneers of Michigan. These rooms are furnished with the chairs, desks and tables from the old State House, besides many relics of olden time, which are kept in trust for future generations. Also a volume of historical collections and addresses of the pioneers is printed yearly and sold in all parts of the State.

Ladies and gentlemen, in my social remarks I wish to thank you for the great honor heretofore conferred by the citizens in selecting me for the office of president of the pioneer society. My age and infirmities are such that it plainly shows me at the age of 77 years that it is my wish to resign, and do not wish to be elected again. But while strength lasts shall do my best to promote the best interests of the society. We hope a true and historic record may be made of every township in the county of Lenawee.

WILLARD STEARNS FOR CONGRESS.

Willard Stearns, of Adrian, the democratic nominee for Congress in the second, is well-known in all the counties of the district. Mr. Stearns was born at Cherry Valley, N. Y., Oct. 3, 1838. In 1851 he came to Michigan and settled in the town of Franklin, living with his stepfather, Henry Bowen. At eighteen years of age he taught his first school in Ogden. He graduated from the State Normal School in 1862. In July 1863 he enlisted in the army and served as lieutenant in the eleventh cavalry until November 1864. He then studied law with Norman Geddes and Gov. Greenly, of Adrian. In 1867 he graduated from the law department of the state university and was admitted to the bar immediately thereafter. He formed a partnership with Gov. Greenly, which continued till 1875. In 1871 he was elected county superintendent of schools for two years being the first democrat elected to a county office in Lenawee county for twenty years. In 1875 he was elected justice of the peace of Adrian, and served four years. In April 1878 he purchased the Adrian Press and has been the manager of that paper ever since. He served six years as alderman in the Adrian city council. In June 1885 he was appointed postmaster of Adrian, which position he now holds. Mr. Stearns is in the prime of vigorous manhood, both intellectually and physically. He is an uncompromising democrat, and is sound on all the great issues now before the people. His previous experience has given him a good schooling for the post to which he now aspires, and if elected he will make a faithful representative.

WILLARD STEARNS.

A careful examination of the election returns two years ago, and a survey of the situation now, makes it evident that the democratic convention hit the nail on the head in his nomination. Here are the figures of the election two years ago.

ON GOVERNOR IN 1886.

	Luce	Yaple	Dickie
Hillsdale	4,368	2,774	706
Lenawee	5,523	5,010	1,087
Monroe	2,547	3,095	271
Washtenaw	3,628	4,718	814
	16,066	15,597	2,878
	15,597
Luce's plurality, 469

PLURALITY ON GOVERNOR.

	Luce	Yaple
Hillsdale	1594
Lenawee	513
Monroe		548
Washtenaw		1090
	2107	1638
	1638
Luce	469

ON CONGRESSMAN.

	Allen	Salsbury
Hillsdale	1666
Lenawee	464
Monroe		587
Washtenaw		527
	2130	1114
	1114
Allen's plurality	1016

From these figures it will be seen that Mr. Allen got 72 votes more than Luce in Hillsdale, 39 more in Monroe, and 563 more in Washtenaw. Two years ago, by a singular coincidence, Mr. Allen received a large prohibition vote in every county of the district and also a heavy German contingent in Washtenaw. A remarkable coincidence of this kind is not likely to occur a second time. He will be no stronger than his party vote this fall. The Prohibs have a strong candidate in Mr. Fellows, who will poll his party strength. The fusion between the democrats and greenbackers is firmly united by Mr. Stearns' nomination. He will poll every greenback vote in Hillsdale, and he is especially popular with the German element in both Lenawee and Washtenaw. The republican plurality two years ago was only 469 on a very light vote. The decrease in the vote from 18·4 came largely from the democrats. The fusionists, with the tide running in their favor, as it is now, can wipe out the 469 plurality which Luce had in 1886, for they actually have a majority in the district, if the votes are all polled. If every revenue reformer in the four counties shall do his duty this fall, Mr. Stearns will certainly represent this district in the next Congress.

The drouth is becoming so severe in this section that many shade trees are suffering badly.

THE K. OF L. MEETING.

The stirring strains of the city band called a large audience around their stand last evening to listen to the State Master Workman of the K. of L., Chas. Hasse, of Lansing, deliver an address on the condition of the laboring man. Mr. Hasse came here under the auspices of the local K. of L. organization, and his address was one full of interest, and was listened to intently throughout. He was introduced by S.C. Stacy in a few brief remarks, and began his speech by giving the origin of the K. of L. organization. The K. of L. does not approve of strikes unless as a last resort, when it is necessary to maintain their manhood. Arbitration is the weapon with which to settle difficulties between employers and employed. The Knights are an intelligent body and meet to discuss these questions. They know when to strike and when not to. One of the sections in its preamble is the prohibiting of child labor, and the speaker gave an account of child labor in the mills of Muskegon, where they are put to work when so young they have to stand on a block in order to reach the machine. In consequence of this the schools are vacant and the children grow up in ignorance and vice. The reason given is they have to work in order to help the father make both ends meet. These are the children whom we expect to perpetuate this government. Is this right? No, pay the father more wages and he will make both ends meet. Is eight hours a day long enough for a man to work? It is calculated that one-third the workingmen in the U. S. are idle. Why is it? Some college bred man says there is an overproduction. I don't believe it. Is there an overproduction of boots and shoes when children go to school in cold winter weather with their toes sticking out of old shoes. Is that an overproduction? I think not. It is an under consumption. I simply say give a man fair pay for a fair day's work. Eight hours a day is enough. It will employ the other third that are idle. $1.25 a day is big wages for a laboring man, especially in lumber mills. Now there is an average of five persons in a family. Suppose it costs 25c a day for each one of them, (that is a fair average,) is it any wonder that the child has to help make both ends meet. And a man is generally idle from three to four months in a year. Who is going to chip in that 25cts. a day then? The K. of L. are trying to find a remedy for these evils. When a man joins the society we try to teach him and be learned. Three months schooling is all I ever obtained. My father died and left me to support the family, and I began like those children in Muskegon. The school where I obtained what knowledge I possess was the Knights of Labor. It is the best school I ever saw.

WM. C. SHARP.

TO YOU PERSONALLY.

DEAR SIR:

We wish to call your attention to three facts concerning THE INTERNATIONAL CYCLOPEDIA.

1. It is the most comprehensive Cyclopedia in the world. There is perhaps only one other that contains as many titles, and that is condensed into three volumes, the value of its large number of subjects is marred by the necessarily brief and unsatisfactory manner in which they are treated. THE INTERNATIONAL in fifteen large, but not unwieldy, Royal Octavo volumes, can treat of its 50,000 titles with a degree of fullness sufficient to their importance. It is the fullest, not only in number of titles, but in the relative amount of matter given each title.

2. It has the advantage of being International. The Brittanica is lamentably deficient in American matter, and Appleton's is silent on many foreign subjects of interest. In THE INTERNATIONAL, the articles on foreign men, places, histories, laws, etc., are written chiefly by foreigners of distinction, while the articles pertaining to American interests have been prepared almost entirely by American editors. This gives THE INTERNATIONAL a COMPLETENESS wanting in other Cyclopedias.

3. It is the cheapest Cyclopedia of its size in the world. The Brittanica in its cheapest form costs $120. Appleton's in its cloth binding costs $85, which is more than we charge for THE INTERNATIONAL in its finest Morocco binding.

There are many other points showing the superiority of THE INTERNATIONAL over other works of reference. We merely select these three, urging them upon your earnest consideration.

We shall be glad to correspond with you further. Please reply.

Yours truly,

TEMPERANCE AND WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.

The above formed the principal topics of the lecture delivered by Rev. Anna Shaw, of Boston, Tuesday evening. The opera house was well-filled and the audience was held in close attention throughout a lecture lasting nearly one hour and a half. Miss Shaw is a stout lady of medium height, with hair slightly sprinkled with silver and a pleasant voice that penetrated every part of the house. Her delivery is exceedingly rapid, but very distinct and the continuous flow of words is uninterrupted save by occasional applause. She gave an exceedingly interesting lecture, full of wit and sharp satire.

She began by comparing the old Roman empire with our country today—strong in wealth but weak in morals. One republic follows in the footsteps of another. They were commenced by a body of people who were driven out of their country by their own acts. They have grown along like lines. Frugal in their habits, working along the lines of farm life and husbandry, cultivating the soil as well as the herding of cattle till they became strong enough and increased in numbers as to be able to extend their powers. It is said we have a greater degree of education and intelligence among the common people than any other republic. This may be true. It has been my privilege to stand at the polls in the city of cultured Boston on election day. We have tried to secure local option and women on the school board, and it is certainly true that men came to the polls and voted opposite to what they thought they were doing. An amusing description was given of several men coming to the polls and voting a "yes" slip for whisky. Senator Ingalls was opposed to the enfranchisement of women because they were not logical; their nature was different from men. Wherever men go they leave the impress of one-half of the human race which is masculine.—Wherever women go they leave their impress; but when men and women go together then we have the perfect idea of the results of the human race. Women are represented in connection and by men. It may be true, men may desire to be represented, but if the nature of man is different from the nature of women then how can a man, unlike a woman in nature, represent her in government? Women are not so partisan as men; they vote for the best man, whether republican or democrat. Women are more moral and temperate than men. It is said that one woman in fifty uses intoxicating drinks as a beverage, and that every other man does. Yet the women have no control of the matter of settling this great question aright. We never will have temperance in the land till the women are voters. When we have this moral force upon the law makers, they will feel the influence of it. Miss Shaw concluded with a satirical description of the proceedings of the Massachusetts legislature, and the easy manner in which men may reach them with petitions, while the women, because of their disfranchisement have to withdraw.

The prohibition quartette, composed of Tansley brothers, Walter Heck and R. F. Steinhoff, rendered some campaign music during the evening.

All possible encouragement is given at Adrian College to students needing to economize. At no place is the self-dependent student more respected. Earnest, successful students are warmly welcomed, and all such may count upon the interest and close attention of the college faculty. For information address Dr. G. B. McElroy.

Miss E. Cora DePuy has written a work entitled "Temperance Work of the World" which the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago have in press, and will have ready for the market Sept. 15th. Miss DePuy intends to give one-half of the entire net proceeds of the sale of this book to the prohibition party for campaign purposes, each congressional district receiving the amount sold in its own district. The work is a concise history of all the leading events connected with temperace work and no doubt will have an enormous sale.

We have received the two first numbers of The Graphic Library, which have met with a success that invites the pleasantest anticipations of the success of the rest of the series. Number one contains the most concise and comprehensive life of Grover Cleveland ever published, and embraces all his notable State papers. It is illustrated by pictures of the President and Mrs. Cleveland, the wedding at the White House, Cleveland's birthplace and other interesting places and events. Number Two presents the great Tariff speech of the Hon. Roger Q Mills of Texas, summarizing the famous Mills bill, and is set off with a number of powerful cartoons. Each number will be made up of sixteen pages, beautifully printed on paper of extra weight, so as to be easily preserved. The Graphic Library will issue a new number every month, and the series is likely to become a highly interesting and valuable contribution to contemporaneous historical literature. It is published by the New York Daily Graphic. It is evident that these publications were not intended by the publishers for campaign documents, but the thorough manner in which they cover the matters treated causes them to be of great value in educating the masses respecting the administration of President Cleveland and the all-absorbing tariff question. Our local committee should see that a portion of the copies ordered by the National organization are placed in their hands for distribution among the people of this section.

THE ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING.

The school meeting last Monday evening was an innovation in this town. First the attendance was large enough to show that the patrons took some interest in the schools, and secondly a large number of ladies attended and participated in the meeting. The women stormed the castle, and elected one of their own number as a trustee. The ladies have threatened for two or three years to attend the annual meeting, but they have never before been able to muster up sufficient courage to carry the threat into execution. They were present last Monday to the number of 35 and made up nearly one-third of the total attendance. Their presence excited some comment, but it gave rise to no trouble or opposition whatever, and the entire proceedings of the meeting were marked by harmony and friendly feeling. Moderator Mills called the meeting to order, and Director North read the minutes of the last annual meeting and then submitted his report. The same was accepted and adopted. The chief tables of the report are printed below.

Also, that special taxes be raised as follows, viz:

For general school purposes	$3,770 00
" bonded indebtedness and interest	1,680 00
" Director's salary	50 00
Total	$5,400 00

Also, that the balance of $100.03 now in the building fund be turned into the general fund.
I. G. NORTH, Director.

Ballots were then taken for trustees to fill the places of David McNair and Dr. George Howell, one informal and one formal ballot being taken for each. Mrs. Alice Hardenburg and Albert L. Brewer were duly elected. The ladies selected Mrs. Hardenburg as their candidate and she was chosen by a good majority. The retiring members of the board have made a good record. Mr. McNair has served for twenty-one years in all and for six successive terms and has always been regarded as a model schoolofficer. Had he not positively declined to serve he would certainly have been invited to remain on the board another term. He declined in favor of A. L. Brewer. The two new members however are abundantly qualified for the position and the board will suffer no detriment by their election.

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A serial story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD, both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

1st Representative Dist. Democratic Convention.

The democrats of the 1st representative district of Lenawee county will meet in convention at the village council rooms in Tecumseh, on Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1888, at 1:30 o'clock p. m., to place in nomination a candidate for the state legislature.

BY ORDER DIST. COMMITTEE.

POLITICAL BASE BALL.

A prohibition rain last Friday made it necessary to postpone the ball game between the democrats and republicans to Saturday, when it was played. The most prominent feature of the game was the kicking and eclipsed all former efforts in that direction. It was not a mild gentle reproof, but a great big goutinual 8x10 kick, and the object of all this was the umpire, who bore it with a serene smile and sustained all of his decisions. Tecumseh is noted for her kicking propensities. Donavin, the Elkhart catcher who played with us against the Eclipse club of Detroit, remarked, that if that was a sample of Tecumseh's audience, no money could hire him to play another game here. In Saturday's game the g. o. p. put in their best kicks until the third innings, when the old bourbons thought they were objects of unjust discrimination and retaliated with a continual kick to the end of the game. Notwithstanding all this several good plays were made on both sides. The republicans had the strongest nine, and Beebe, their pitcher struck out 18 men. Loomis and Grimm struck out 11. The score stood at the end of the game 11 to 6 in favor of the republicans. Following are the players and positions:

REP.		DEM.
Eckert,	catcher,	Ross
Beebe,	pitcher,	Loomis
Lewis,	s ort,	Holderman
Van Tine,	1st base,	Conklin
Anderson,	2d base,	Grimm
Beebe,	3d base,	Johnson
Heesen,	r. field,	Root
Stevens,	c. field,	Grey
McClure,	l. field,	Goddum

The'sa expect to play another gai w, and they are undecide r to get a prohibitionist or a democrat to umpire. The democrats allow that the republican umpire showed offensive partisanship in the game last Saturday.

OBITUARY.

WARING—Ella G. Waring, eldest daughter of Alva M. and Fannie F. Waring, was born in Tecumseh, Mich. Jan. 21, 1870, where her early life was passed. With the family she took her departure from that place Jan. 5, '86, bound for Kansas, where at Wilburn, Ford county, she with them found a home until the Heavenly Father called her to the "home above," Aug. 18, 1888, after a brief illness. Ella was a young lady of fine qualities and more than usual promise. Just blossoming into womanhood, she was coming to be more than ever prominent in her family, in the church, and in the society at large, where her competence and usefulness had already won for her a large place, as also had her warm and sympathetic disposition in the affections of the people. May God grant that her mantle may fall on some youthful heart, who, when they lay down their life work, may as richly deserve that highest of encomiums of which our Lord was the author, and to which we may all aspire, "She hath done what she could." NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

CONDENSED REPORT OF CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINSG.

All Matters of Importance Transacted During the Past Six Days Rolled Down in Compact Form—What the National Solons Are Doing for the Good of the Country.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug 29.—Hoar's fisheries resolution, amended by the Edmunds addition printed in these dispatches, was adopted by the senate yesterday. The conference report on the sundry civil bill then came up and Allison in explaining it said the appropriations this year—if made to correspond with the amounts asked by the departments, as the senate had unanimously done—would aggregate $431,000,000, only $19,000,000 less than the estimated revenue of $450,000,000. A long political debate then ensued, in which Hale, Beck, Blackburn and Sherman participated, and the sundry civil report was still pending when the senate, after a short executive session, adjourned.

Grosvenor was among those who asked the house for leave of absence, and he stated frankly that he wanted to get away to make political speeches in Maine. Breckinridge opposed the leave, but it was finally granted. A discussion then took place on the bill to have all government securities printed by hand presses. Foran of Ohio insisting that steam press work was inferior and more easily counterfeited. The bill went over, and the Oklahoma bill came up and Payson proposed an amendment throwing the territory open to homesteaders. This was opposed by Springer, and pending debate the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug 30.—Reagan introduced a bill in the senate yesterday to prohibit [illegible] The report on the sundry civil bill was again taken up and Gorman spoke to controvert the implication of Democratic extravagance made by Allison Tuesday. The conference report was then agreed to. The senate insisted on those amendments disagreed to by the house and asked a further conference. Morgan made a speech defending the position of the president on the Chinese question. A [illegible] resolution was then held and the senate adjourned.

The house passed another joint resolution [illegible] this session to provide temporary [illegible] government expenses. The bill providing for printing of government securities [illegible] done on hand presses was passed, and the Oklahoma bill was taken up, and Payson's amendment to throw the land open to homesteaders alone, rejected. The bill was still pending when the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 31.—A resolution was offered in the senate yesterday by Blair instructing the interstate commerce committee to inquire into the Craig system of telegraphy, by which it is claimed 2,000 words can be sent at a cost of 2 cents. If this was so Blair wanted to secure it for the people. George then finished his speech in defense of the president's fisheries message, and Cullom took the floor in opposition thereto. When Cullom had concluded, the fortifications bill was taken up. Amendments were adopted, providing for a board of army officers to supervise gun, motor, torpedo and other tests; appropriating $100,000 for dynamite gun tests, restoring the house appropriation for a gun factory at Watervliet arsenal to $550,000, increasing the appropriation for steel for heavy ordnance to $2,500,000, and providing for the use of American steel only. The bill then went over, and, Cullom offered a resolution inquiring of the treasury whether Canadian goods have been transported in bond across United States territory since the abrogation of the Washington treaty, and if so by what authority of law. The senate then adjourned.

The house released Tracey of New York from further duty on the Pacific railways and coinage, weights and measures committees at his own request. The Oklahoma bill was briefly discussed, laid aside and the retaliatory bill slightly changed from Wilson's proposition, rejected. The Oklahoma bill was again taken up, but no quorum voted on the first proposition put to the house. Springer offered a resolution directing the sergeant-at-arms to telegraph absent members to return, but it was declared out of order and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 1.—The senate yesterday passed the house joint resolution providing for government expenditures in the absence of the regular appropriations. Cullom's resolution referring to shipments of Canadian merchandise duty free through the United States was laid over, Cullom deferring to an objection by George that the president had no power to stop the same. Cullom said he was not sure about the statute in the case. A long political debate on the subject of participation in campaign work by goverment officials took place, and then the fortifications bill was taken up, the committee amendments adopted, the bill passed and a conference ordered. The joint resolution authorizing the land office to certify to Kansas lands for the benefit of agriculture and mechanical arts was passed. Some unimportant business was then debated, but no action taken and the senate adjourned until Monday.

The house took up the sundry civil bill after routine business had been disposed of, and insisted on its disagreement to the senate's amendment providing for continuing the work on the congressional library building. Payson said the building could not be finished for less than $10,000,000, and might cost $16,000,000. Pending action on the other amendments recess was taken to 8 p. m., and at the evening session twenty-seven private pension bills were passed and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 3.—The retaliation bill was reported to the house Saturday and made the special order for Tuesday. Upon resumption of the debate on the sundry civil bill, Breckinridge, Symes, and Cox advocated the senate proposition for an appropriation to investigate the subject of irrigating the arid lands in the west. [illegible] the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 4.—Vest showed a book in the senate yesterday entitled "Protection echoes from the Capitol," edited by Thomas H. McKee, assistant senate librarian, and offered a resolution of inquiry into the same—whether it is necessary to prevent or punish it. This lead to an extended partisan debate, participated in by Vest and Plumb principally, and Vest's resolution went over. Hoar read a letter he had received from Charles Arpin, of Quebec, suggesting that if certain bay claims held by Canadians against the United States were paid now the Canadians would assist the Republican party in the election—By making a liberal allowance. Hoar asked that the letter be filed so that when the claims came up this letter might come up, too, as an attempt at corruption. Certain bills for lighthouses, principally on the Atlantic coast, were passed, and then the bill to prohibit Chinese immigration was taken up (the one passed by the house yesterday). Butler opposed the bill, and the debate was long, and finally went it over without action, and the senate adjourned.

Scott of Pennsylvania introduced in the house yesterday, as soon as it was called to order, a bill which, with all its legal verbiage eliminated, is in effect as follows: "From and after the passage of this bill Chinese laborers are absolutely prohibited from landing anywhere in the United States under any circumstances. All laws inconsistent with this are hereby repealed. The bill was passed without division. Bills were introduced to punish those connected with trusts and to put cotton bagging on the free list. An attempt to get up the Oklahoma bill disclosed the absence of a quorum, and the house adjourned.

CHICAGO, Aug 29.—The usual luck attended Chicago in its game with the Pittsburg club yesterday, and again Anson's nine went down before one of the clubs that bring up the rear of the procession. The only consolation "Old Ans" had was that New York also got left. The league scores yesterday were: At Chicago—Chicago 2, Pittsburg 9; at New York—New York 0—Boston 2; at Washington—Washington 2, Philadelphia 9; at Detroit—Detroit 10, Indianapolis 3.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—The home base ball club had it "put all over them" again by the Pittsburgers yesterday, and New York was once more accommodating and got downed by Boston. League scores yesterday were: At Chicago—Chicago 2, Pittsburg 4; at New York—New York 1, Boston 2; at Detroit—Detroit 15, Indianapolis 1; at Washington—Washington 2, Philadelphia 5.

CHICAGO, Aug 31.—The Chicago club went to Indianapolis yesterday and broke its base ball record by beating a tail-ender, while New York kept up its reputation in Boston and laid down before the beaneaters. The scores in the league were: At Indianapolis—Indianapolis 0, Chicago 1; at Boston—Boston 7, New York 3; at Pittsburg—Pittsburg 1, Detroit 3; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia [illegible]

CHICAGO, Sept. 1.—The Chicago club was woefully beaten at Indianapolis yesterday. Anson put his new pitcher Tener into the box, and he was hit very hard in the first two innings. In the eighth three hits and four errors scored five runs. Healy pitched for the Hoosiers, who put up an almost perfect game all around. League scores yesterday were: At Indianapolis—Indianapolis 14, Chicago 0; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 0, Washington 4—six innings, rain; at Boston—Boston 4, New York 10; Pittsburg-Detroit, no game—rain.

League games Saturday resulted in the following scores: At Indianapolis—Indianapolis 8, Chicago 5; at Boston—Boston 2, New York 5; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 2, Washington 0—twelve innings; at Pittsburg—first game Pittsburg 7, Detroit 3; second game Pittsburg 2, Detroit 8.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4—The scores made by the league clubs yesterday were as follows: At New York—New York 0, Philadelphia 0—eleven innings—darkness; at Chicago—Chicago 9, Detroit 2; at Indianapolis—first game Indianapolis 5, Pittsburg 1; second game Indianapolis 4, Pittsburg 5—ten innings; at Boston—first game Boston 3, Washington 1; (second game) Boston 7, Washington 1.

DIED ON THE GALLOWS.

George Cox Meet His Fate with Indifference—A Negro Hanged.

SAN ANDREAS, Cal., Sept. 1.—George W. Cox was hanged here Friday for the murder of his son-in-law, Henry G. Cook, last November. Cox slept soundly Thursday night. Rev. Mr. Crawford visited him Friday morning, and when told by the minister that it was now time for him to turn to the Saviour, Cox replied: "Yes, I'll turn to the devil." He maintained the belief that death is the end of the soul. He said to the sheriff Thursday night: "I am no more afraid to die to-morrow than to eat my breakfast." When asked by the sheriff about 9 o'clock Friday what time he preferred the execution to take place, Cox replied: "At any time between 10 and 12; it doesn't make any difference to me." At 10:39 the condemned man ascended the scaffold and Cox asked if the rope and knot were all right. He was then placed on the trap and the straps were placed on him by the sheriff, during which time he said: "Take good observation, gentlemen, this nothing is only when a fellow thinks so." As the rope was being placed around his neck he explained: "Boys, I'm not sorry for anything I've done in my life." At 10:48 the black cap was adjusted and he said: "Don't smother me." The drop then fell. Soon his pulse was still.

AMERICAN POLITICS PROHIBITED.

Irish Leaguers Warned Against Interfering in the National Campaign.

LINCOLN, Neb., Sept. 1.—The following dispatch enforcing the doctrine of non-interference in American politics was sent from the headquarters of the Irish National league yesterday addressed to Daniel Linahan, president of the Central branch of the Irish National League of America, St. Louis, Mo.:

"Understanding from St. Louis papers that a demonstration will take place Sunday next under the auspices of the Central branch at which American politics will be discussed by Republican and Democratic speakers, President Fitzgerald directs me to inform you that such a departure from the non-political course of the Irish National league, if carried out, will compel the executive to cancel the charter of the Central branch.

A BLOW AT PROHIBITION.

Decision That Will Tend to Nullify the Iowa State Law.

WATERLOO, Ia., Sept. 4.—Justice Shields Saturday morning fined Charles Swanson of the $1,500 worth of liquors seized from Pfeifer's drug store at Cedar Falls. The sheriff gave up the liquor, which was immediately shipped back to the parties from whom it was originally purchased. There was no question as to the proof of the sale of liquors by the druggist without conforming to the formalities of the law, and it is understood that the justice based his decision upon the ruling of the supreme court allowing the transportation of liquors into Iowa, which, it holds, carries with it the right to sell. If this decision be upheld it will tend to destroy the effect of all state prohibitory laws.

Mrs. Sheridan's Pension Bill.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 1.—At the evening session of the house Friday Bingham of Pennsylvania called up the Mrs. Sheridan pension bill. Cheadle of Indiana objected because of no quorum and wanted a special day set. Kilgore of Texas objected, admitting that he wanted the billed killed. The bill was allowed to retain its place on the calendar. Kilgore also objected to another bill called up by Caruth of Kentucky, and hard words passed between Kilgore and Caruth. After passing twenty-seven private pension bills the house adjourned.

BELIEF OF THE PEOPLE.

LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 9.

Text of the Lesson, Num. xiv, 1-10. Commit Verses 2-4—Golden Text, Heb. iii, 19—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This is the continuation of our last lesson, and shows the sad results of unbelief. Jehovah had delivered them from the power and bondage of Pharaoh; had made a way for them through the Red sea; had fed them with food from heaven day by day; had brought them water out of the rock; had given them flesh to eat in abundance; had fought for them against Amalek and conquered; had spoken to them from the burning mountain; had shown them his great love and power in so many ways and had come to dwell visibly among them in the tabernacle erected for Him in their midst; the pillar of cloud and of fire, symbol of His presence, was visible to all the millions of Israel, and yet these ten unbelieving rulers in Israel speak of the strength of the sons of Anak as a obstacle too formidable to be overcome. Was there ever such unbelief and such utter forgetfulness of a present almighty God? Let us see. Some one who reads this has been told of a Saviour who will give victory over every besetting sin and cause the weakest and most unworthy to live even here a life of rest and peace and joy; and not only so, but you have seen it proved in some measure in the lives of some who are known to you. It is a good land they have found, and you know it. But to your eyes there are great difficulties in the way of your getting there, and you say: "I am not able, it is not for me." Now, what is that but just the language of these ten faithless rulers?

1. "All the congregation cried," but it was neither a cry of victory nor a cry for help; it was a cry of despair, because they saw no helper, had no faith in God. Contrast the cry of Abijah, and Asa, and Jehoshaphat, and the speedy answers granted to them (II Chon. xiii, 14; xiv, 11; xviii, 31), and be of good courage.

2. "And all murmured." In ch. xii, it was Miriam and Aaron speaking against Moses; now it is all Israel murmuring against Moses and Aaron. "They despised the pleasant land; they believed not His word; but murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord." (Ps. cvi, 24-25.) They had murmured at Mazah and in the wilderness of sin (Ex. xv, 24; xvi, 1-10), and all these murmurings were against the Lord (Ex. xvi, 8); for all that is done to or for a servant of the Lord He counts as done to himself. (Luke x, 16.) The love of God which brought them out of Egypt was bringing them, in the best and kindest way, to a glorious inheritance, but they despised it and Him, and murmured and complained.

3, 4. "Return into Egypt." The wish for death was twice repeated in v. 2; the return to Egypt is twice suggested in these verses. At Horeb they made a calf and worshiped it instead of God; now they want a human captain instead of "God Himself, who was with them as their captain." (II Chron. xiii, 12.) Nehemiah says that "in their rebellion they appointed a captain to return to their bondage." (Neh. ix, 17.) Oh, what sin and rebellion on the part of man, what long suffering and love and patience on the part of God. This God is our God; we are like Israel, and all these things are written for our learning. Paul says: "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord . . . forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. iii, 8, 13, 14). How few there are like Paul, how many like Lot's wife, who though escaped from Sodom left her heart there, and looked back. "Jesus said no man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God (Isa. ix, 62); so these murmurers could not enter in because of unbelief, but their carcases fell in the wilderness." (Heb. iii, 19; Num. xiv, 27-29).

5. "Moses and Aaron fell on their faces." See also xvi, 4, 22, 45; xx, 6. This was the only thing to do in such a case; cry unto God and leave them to Him. How wonderful that God will let us plead with Him and be moved by our pleading. See Abraham pleading for Sodom and the Lord promising to spare the city if ten righteous persons could be found in it. (Gen. xviii, 23-32.) See Moses on this occasion, hear his prayer in vs. 13-19, and note the answer in v. 20. Moses pleads not for himself, nor for his glory, but he is jealous for the Lord and for the glory of His name. The Lord heard and pardoned, yet in after days there came a time when neither the prayers of a Moses nor a Samuel could have prevailed for them (Jer. xv, 1), nor the righteousness of Noah, Daniel and Job have saved them (Ezek. xiv, 14-20). "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy" (Prov. xix, 1).

6. "Joshua and Caleb rent their clothes." Caleb had spoken before (xiii, 30), but now Joshua joins him in faithful testimony, and these are the only two of all the thousands in Israel who were over twenty years of age when they left Egypt who entered the good land (vs. 30, 38). God does always honor those who have faith in him.

7, 8. "An exceeding good land." Even the unbelievers had to confess that (v. 27); but hear further these two faithful ones: "If the Lord delight in us, He will bring us into this land and give it us." They do not boast of any power or wisdom above the other ten, but testify to the power of the Lord. "I labored more abundantly than they all," says Paul, "yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me." "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." (I Cor. xv, 10; i, 31.) If any ask, How can the Lord take delight in such as we are? the answer is, "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear Him, in those that hope in His mercy." (Ps. cxlvii, 11.) "The Lord taketh pleasure in His people; He will beautify the meek with salvation" (Ps. cxlix, 4). And as to victory over all enemies, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." (I John v, 4.) "The battle is not ours, but God's." (II Chron. xx, 15.)

9. "Rebel not against the Lord." "Fear not the people," "the Lord is with us." Confidence in and obedience to God, seeing no one but Jesus only, this would give perfect rest and peace and constant victory. To Moses and Joshua God's word was all Jehovah had spoken, and the last word of Jesus to the apostles was simply "I am with you."

10. "Stone them with stones." So they would have done to Moses (Ex. xvii, 4); so they were ready to do to Christ (John viii, 59; x, 31); so they did to Stephen and Paul (Acts vii, 58; xiv, 19). Truth is never popular: "I hate him," said Ahab of Micaiah, the prophet; "put him in prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction" (II Chron. xviii, 7, 26). So those who stand for the truth will find hatred even in our day from those who are of the world.

HAPPY ICELAND.

Its Geography, People and Institutions Described by a Native Now in This Country.

Dr. Ludwig von Dolcke is the son of an Icelandic stadts-holder, a gentleman of refinement, who was educated in Sweden, and has traveled extensively, and has come to this country to practice his profession of electrologist.

The Doctor speaks English fluently, having remained in the country twenty-three months when he first came here in 1844 as Commissioner to select the lands in Dakota and joining British Columbia territory, upon which a colony of six thousand Icelanders settled later. He says that four thousand more are coming very soon.

"A popular ignorance, of Iceland prevails," the doctor said, "owing, I think, largely to the misleading name of Iceland. The island, of about 42,000 square miles, is green and fertile in the southern portion from May until October, when deer and sheep graze at large. In winter the snow is abundant.

"The recent millennium celebration has attracted travelers to Iceland lately. A good line of steamers sail from Copenhagen fortnightly. The country is under the protection of Denmark, and there the connection ends.

"There are nine provinces, each of which elect twelve of the oldest and wisest of its men to perform duties somewhat analogous to a State legislature here. There is also a national gathering similar to the House of Representatives and a body like the Senate, which meets once a year. But there is little governing and no law making to do.

"Each man governs himself upon the broadest principles of personal liberty in everything.

"The Icelanders are descended from the old Norse Vikings, the free-born families tracing their lineage to Harold and his men, who, their rich Norse mythology says, landed in 613. Your history makes it in the eighth century.

"The land is owned by a few, and those who work the estates are serfs, who pay rental.

"Traveling is by pony or deer, and in the mountains of northern Iceland man's foot has never trod. The Icelandic pony will take you as far as it is safe for you to go.

"The city of Redjavik has about 18,000 people, the greater portion of the people living upon the estates. There is splendid hunting and fishing, the wild game, similar to the northern part of this country, being nearly all white. Polar bears that come down with the icebergs furnish popular hunting.

"The Icelander is very proud of his pure and courageous Norman blood. You know that the French, English and German aristocracy, if possible, will claim even a trace of Norman blood, and there is a people that have nothing else.

"I never heard of but two cases of thieving. One was an Icelander who had broken his arm and whose family in the winter were suffering for food. He stole several sheep and was finally detected. He was at once put under medical care for his injury, provisions were furnished his family and he was in time given work. That was his punishment.

"The other case was a German who stole seventeen sheep. He was in comfortable circumstances and the theft was malicious. His punishment was to sell all his property, restore the value of his thefts and leave the country or be executed. He left at once."

Disputes and trades are settled by arbitration, the doctor says, and the decision must be accepted by all concerned. Public disgrace attaches to any slight misdeed and no one can live there and undergo the consequent mortification.

"Besides agriculture, which produces barley, rye and vegetables, the great industry is sheep raising. The exports are largely eiderdown, picked from wild birds, lava from the volcano, Mt. Hecla, which is pumice stone, and sulphur, which is found in similar and such varied states as salt.

"Vineland is the name of America used by all the people except the few who were educated abroad," continued the doctor. "It is the old Norse name.

"No people in the world are esteemed so highly as Americans, and this is why: "The Icelanders know that their blood is purer than any of the European nations, where every man is generally a lord or a peasant, as he is born. But in America every boy and girl is born a prince or princess. The Icelander loves his own personal freedom and princely birth. He thinks that the man who has won both by the possession of political conditions for which he fought is his equal."

MANUFACTURING MELANCHOLY.

Strange Reason Why a Sturdy Fellow Thought Himself in a Declining Way.

I met at lunch yesterday a young fellow of my acquaintance who told me with a lugubrious look that he was not so strong then as he had been the day before, that he should be weaker still on the following day, and so on to the close of his life.

I was much shocked at this painful announcement, supposing, of course, that he was suffering from some incurable organic disease, and that his doctor had just pronounced sentence of death upon him. The case seemed to be a particularly hard one, inasmuch as the fellow was apparently in the very flush of health, and I had long known him as a vigorous athlete.

I was casting about in my mind for something appropriate to say on the occasion, when he relieved my fears by stating the exact cause of the trouble.

"You see," he said, "yesterday was my thirty fifth birthday, and after 35 all the authorities agree a man's bodily strength begins to decline. So, you understand, I am on the down track, bound to get weaker every day until I sink into the grave. Isn't that enough to make a fellow blue?"—Boston Post.

The Best Kind of Crop.

He had occasion to drive from the station to his destination with a typical "Cape Codder," one of those keen but not over brilliant-looking sons of the seacoast.

The Bostonian had noticed as they rode along, the bleak country, with its uninviting fields and sandy strips of land, and finally said to his companion:

"I don't see how you live in this forlorn looking country. What do you raise down here, anyway?"

"Wall," was the drawling answer, "we plant schoolhouses and raise men."

WHAT IS STEAM?

A Little Lesson in Science.

When water once begins to boil it is impossible to raise its temperature any higher; all excess of heat is absorbed by the escaping, as so called, latent heat, and is given out again when it condenses.

We often speak of seeing the steam escaping from the mouth of a kettle, but this is incorrect—steam is an invisible vapor, and we can no more see it than we can air. What we do see are the minute drops of water into which the steam condenses on coming into the cool air.

If we boil water in a glass flask, we shall notice that nothing can be seen in the interior, and by observing the steam escaping from a kettle we shall notice that there is quite a distance between the end of the spout and the point where the cloud becomes visible.

This cloud of steam is of exactly the same nature as the clouds which float in the sky, and which are formed by the condensation in cool upper regions of aqueous vapor in the air.

HAY FEVER.

I have suffered greatly from periodical returns of hay fever. Covert & Cheever, Druggists, suggested Ely's Cream Balm. I used it during a severe attack. The Population of Tecumseh.

We would advise all not to neglect the opportunity to call on us and get a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free. Respectfully, Baker & Hall, Druggists.

Not Those Eminent Persons.

The two men had occupied the same seat in a railway coach for half a day and the train had reached its destination.

"I am indebted to you, sir, for an agreeable conversation that has relieved greatly the monotony of a long journey. May I ask your name?"

"Certainly. My name is Sullivan."

(Jocosely.) "Not Mr. Sullivan of Boston?"

"Yes; I reside in Boston."

"What! Not——"

(Haughtily.) "No, sir! I am a college professor."

"Beg pardon. Permit me to introduce myself. My name is Crowley."

(Smilingly.) "Not Mr. Crowley of New York?"

"Yes; New York is my home."

"What! Not——"

(Coldly.) "Good-day, sir!"

(Frigidly.) "Good-day!"—Chicago Tribune.

Awful Accident to a Boy.

His little brother tried to draw the stick out, and it broke off, leaving five inches of it in him. The boy then walked home and died soon after.

RALEIGH, N. C., Sept. 1.—Denning and his sister, Abbie, two idiots, quarreled Thursday. Abbie got a rope, put it around his neck and then put it over one of the joists of the house and hanged him. A neighbor went to the house just in time to see the unfortunate brother die.

Learned Professors Say.

The most serious diseases of the heart, says Prof. Da Costa, may occur without any symptoms. Prof. Proussau, of Paris, states that death from heart disease is usually caused by congestion of the lungs, liver, stomach or kidneys, from imperfect circulation of the blood. Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart is the latest and most reliable remedy for this little understood but grave disease. It has cured thousands of cases. Don't fail to try it. Ask for testimonals. Sold at Baker and Hall's Drug Store.

LOG CABINS have become a thing of the past. From them have come generals, statesmen, lawyers and divines, equals in every way of those who were born in the purple of European courts. Paragon Clarke's extract of Flax Skin Cure, like many other Positives discovered to mankind, was accidentally discovered by accident. LIFE IN RUSSIA.

Interesting Interview with an American Resident of That Country Who Is Now on a Visit Here.

"As soon as I crossed the Russian frontier," said the newly landed visitor to the interviewing reporter, "I saw I was in a strange country. At the Custom-House a stalwart and soldierly body of troops in the various picturesque uniforms of the Russian army confronted me. The Cossack of the Don and the Cossack of the Dnieper, the Lithuanian and the Pole vied with each other in dignity and gorgeous array.

"When I arrived at St. Petersburg I was at once impressed with the genial hospitality of this warm-hearted people. The Russian eats on an average once every two hours. The climate and custom require such frequent meals, the digestion of which is aided by frequent draughts of vodki and tea.

"Vodki is the Russian whiskey, made from potatoes and rye. It is fiery and colorless, generally flavored with some extract like vanilla or orange, as we flavor soda-water. It is drunk from small cups that hold perhaps half a gill. Vodki and tea are the inseparable accompaniments of friendly as well as of business intercourse in the country of the Czar. Drunken men are rare.

"Russia and Sweden are the only countries in which the double dinner is the rule. When you go to the house of a Russian, be he a friend or a stranger, you are at once invited to a side table, where salted meats, pickled eels, salted cucumbers and many other spicy and appetizing viands are urged upon you with an impressiveness that knows no refusal. This repast is washed down with frequent cups of vodki.

"That over, and when the visitor feels as if he had eaten enough for twenty-four hours, the host says, 'And now to dinner.' At the dinner table the meal is served in courses, with stacks of bottles, here and there on the table, of champagne and delightful wines grown in the Crimea and in Bessarabia, where excellent clarets and Burgundies are made and sold for from 12 to 35 cents the bottle.

"In the cultivation of wines, as in many other industries and, indeed, many civil reforms, Russia is making strides which Americans little realize.

"Business does not begin fairly in the cities until noon, and the working classes, who are stolid and contented, labor from 14 to 16 hours a day for from 14 to 35 cents a day. Yet labor as well as manufactures is protected. Immigration is not desired, and emigration is only permitted under special restrictions.

"The Russians are exceedingly friendly towards Americans. By paying handsome concessions to the Government, a few Americans have been permitted to engage in business in Russia.

"In the cities the Russians live almost entirely in apartment houses. There are 10,000 tenants, it is said, in one house in St. Petersburg. The houses are nearly always of brick, and the government buildings are all stuccoed and painted red. Each house has a dvornik who is the agent of the owner and of the police, and a porter who wears the uniform of a colonel in the army, and is the janitor or agent of the tenants.

"The dvornik inspects the passports of every new tenant, and even temporary tenant or visitor, and reports it to the police station, where it is recorded. A like notification is made of every change of residence. The dvornik sits at the back gate of the house, clad generally in a sheepskin. He knows everything that goes on, and is responsible to the police. In this way the perfection of the Russian police system is maintained.

"The Russian has no public ambition to worry him. He eats, drinks, and plays cards until 1 or 2 in the morning. He rises and breakfasts towards noon.

"The Russian women of the better classes are beautiful. They are blondes, with broad cheeks and high cheek bones, clear complexions and peculiarly lovely gray eyes, from which shines out a heart of greenish fire.

"The great Russian game of cards is 'mouche,' not unlike the American poker, in which five cards are dealt, a trump is turned and one may play or pass for the game, which is twenty points."

Nervous Diseases.

There are more nervous than blood diseases. Tens of millions of the nerves of the human body produce headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., as weakness of the nerves of the stomach causes dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc., of the lungs, makes "weak lungs," of the liver produces biliousness, and sympathetic of the whole induces irregularities, scanty, painful, etc., of the sexual organs, impotency, etc. For all weaknesses Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine surpasses all. Book and testimonials free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

Keeping within Bounds.

Said a distinguished patient to his physician, "Doctor will you bind me my medicine, please?"

"Excuse me, sir," responded the man of science, "but I am busy connected with the bulletin part of your case. Another doctor will be here directly."—Life.

TEMPERANCE IN EATING.

The Vice and Mischief of Gluttony.

The vice of inordinate liquor-drinking is open and above-board, and its evils are so palpable that anyone may see them. Over-eating, on the other hand, is accompanied by evils that none but the sufferers and their physicians know much about.

Some years ago no less an authority than Sir Henry Thomson declared that he had been compelled by the facts constantly coming before him to accept the conclusion that more mischief in the form of actual disease, of impaired vigor, and of shortened life, has occurred to civilized men from erroneous habits in eating than from the habitual use of alcoholic drink, considerable as he knew that evil to be. He also declared himself in doubt whether improper and inordinate eating were not as great a moral evil as inordinate drinking.

The fabricators of our food have much, indeed, to answer for. They make digestible raw material into indigestible finished products, and we eat them and suffer. But the cooks are not alone to blame.

People eat more than they should, and they eat what is agreeable to their palates, knowing that it will not be relished by their stomachs. The habit of over-eating is commonly made in childhood, when ignorance and sensation override moderation of appetite and reasonable caution; the child should be restricted to the food that it actually needs, and should not be allowed to make a hog of itself.

When the growth is attained, and the system no longer easily eliminates the waste material not necessary for the ordinary purposes of repair, then the body begins to score up fat beyond what is of use, and fags out the muscles in carrying it around, or, if there is no fattening with over-eating, there are dyspepsia, fevers, gout, rheumatism, biliousness and other ills.

A temperance organization which should lay down as its fundamental law abstinence from excessive eating, would do away with the greater part of the ordinary sicknesses among persons who should live up to the law.

Downed an Anarchist Flag.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 4.—Labor day was observed by an unusually large number of workingmen's organizations, about 1,500 people being in the parade. An association of Anarchists, which has been in existence for some years, joined the parade, and were permitted to march in the rear of the procession, carrying a large red flag, much to the disgust of the workingmen. When they arrived at the garden where the picnic was to be held, the Anarchists attempted to hoist their colors on a pole over the American flag. The Painters' and Baker's unions protested vigorously and a small riot ensued, six of the Anarchists being very roughly handled. The police arrived in time to save their lives, but they were promptly jailed on a charge of rioting.

THIS PAPER is on file in Philadelphia at the Newspaper Advertising Agency of Messrs. N. W. AYER & SON, our authorized agents.

There are Two Distinguishing Characteristics

Which, more than anything else, have contributed to the phenomenal growth of The Chicago Daily News, giving it a circulation larger than that of all other Chicago dailies combined. It seems strange that the first practical, combined application of two such common sense principles in journalism should have been left to a paper as yet only twelve years old. And yet true it is that in this fact lies the real secret of the unparalleled success of The Chicago Daily News. Briefly stated these principles are:

First. THE DAILY NEWS
Is a daily paper for busy people.

Of all mankind the people of Chicago and the busy northwest are the busiest. And yet perhaps no equal number of people are to be found who appreciate so keenly the necessity of an intelligent knowledge of the world's daily doings. They recognize that they, more than anyone else, are the world's providers in many of the most important necessaries of life. How important, then, that they should have their daily intelligence of every event, the world over, which by any possibility can affect their diversified commercial holdings. And in all the higher interests of life where can be found a like number of people more keenly appreciative of all that contributes to progress in art, literature, science, religion, politics, and the thousand and one things which make up modern civilization.

And yet, strange to say, right here in this great, busy northwest, in its busy metropolis Chicago, there has taken place the creation and development of that most cumbrous, unserviceable, time-destroying thing, the "blanket-sheet" newspaper. With the blindness of very fatuity this monstrosity of journalism, this breeder of mental dyspepsia, has steadfastly imposed its mountain of unthreshed straw to the demand of the people for the winnowed grain of fact. It was out of the very incongruousness of such a condition of things that THE DAILY NEWS had its birth. People wanted the News,—all the news—but they demanded it apart from the overpowering mass of the trivial and inconsequential. It is because THE DAILY NEWS satisfactorily meets that demand that its circulation is over "a million a-week."

R. M. LAWRENCE, Williamsville, Ill., says: "The 'big daily' is too much for me. Not that a person is obliged to read everything printed in the 'blanket-sheets,' but one having anything else to do doesn't have time to hunt through the long-drawn twaddle for a few grains of digestible food."

Second. THE DAILY NEWS
Is an Independent, truth-telling newspaper.

The reader can count on one hand the known newspapers whose statements in matters of politics can always be accepted as at least intentionally truthful, and commonly so in fact. On the other hand, it is the all-but-universal rule to praise one's party and candidate to the skies, and to cry down the opposition party and its candidate to the verge of the disreputable. So common have such silly and reprehensible methods in journalism become that they pass unnoticed, and are accepted as a matter of course—as an evil inseparable from practical politics. But this is only another mistake of the thoughtless. The American people are intelligent enough, thoughtful enough, fair enough to appreciate and endorse honest, truth-telling journalism—in truth to prefer it to the misleading, the truth-discoloring dishonesty of the "organ."

The demand is more and more for the fair, impartial, independent newspaper which give the reader all the news, and gives it absolutely free from the taint of partisan bias. This done, an expression of opinion, based upon facts, will commend itself to the thoughtful reader even when he may not find himself in agreement with the conclusions deduced from the premises. Disagreements are of small moment if only confidence in honesty of purpose remains. With no mere political ambition to gratify, no "ax to grind," the impartial and independent newspaper may truly be "guide, philosopher and friend" to honest men holding every shade of political faith. And this is why THE DAILY NEWS has to-day a circulation of over "a-million-a-week."

M. WYGANT, Sibley, Ia., writes: "I am well pleased with THE DAILY NEWS, although I am a 'bred-in-the-bone' Republican with a carpet bag experience in the South ending in 1872. The extreme fairness of THE DAILY NEWS, giving credit where due regardless of party, meets my approval."

When to two such comprehensive elements of popularity THE DAILY NEWS now adds a third in its unparalleled price reduction to One Cent a day, it offers a combination of attractions at once unique and unapproachable by any other American newspaper, and one which will surely multiply its friends throughout the Northwest by the thousands.

The Chicago Daily News is for sale by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The farmer and mechanic can now afford as well as the merchant and professional man to have his metropolitan daily.

A HOT TARIFF DEBATE.

THE JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN CONGRESSMAN ALLEN AND WILLARD STEARNS AT BRITTON.

A Hand to Hand Contest by two Able Champions—Three Bands of Music and a Tremendous Crowd Present—The Speeches well Received by Both Sides.

Britton, entertained the biggest crowd last Monday that was ever gathered in that town. The joint discussion arranged between Congressman Allen and Willard Stearns had been well advertised, the afternoon was pleasant and the crowd gathered from all points of the compass to hear the great tariff question discussed. The village was clad in holiday attire. Many of the buildings were ornamented with flags, while streamers of bunting and political banners stretched across the streets. Three bands were present, the Britton, Tecumseh and Dundee bands. Mr. Allen drove over from Ypsilanti and arrived shortly after two o'clock, and he spent nearly an hour shaking hands and chatting with his acquaintances while waiting for the Adrian delegation.

It was after 3 o'clock when the freight train bearing Mr. Stearns arrived, and as Mr. Allen was billed for a speech at Ann Arbor in the evening the debate was shortened considerably. The program agreed upon was that Mr. Stearns should open with a 35 minute speech, followed by Mr. Allen for 45 minutes, and Mr. Stearns would take 15 minutes to reply.

MR. STEARNS' OPENING.

MY CHAIRMAN:—I was looking over this audience to see a millionaire farmer or working man. If there is one in the audience he will please rise. If I had asked in Detroit an audience of this magnitude a question of that kind ten men would have stood up at once, worth not only a million, but from one to seven millions each—made millionaires by the American system of protection. I look out upon an audience of workingmen who for intelligence have no superior in the United States. I behold representatives of two counties, the farmers of two counties that are not only the best two counties in Michigan but the best agricultural counties in the United States, and I fail to find in that audience a single man who is worth a million dollars. In fact tho' it comprises men who have lived in this county for fifty years, enjoying all the benefits of this American system of protection neither laboringmen nor farmer can be worth one half of a million or quarter of a million. Taxation to be just must be levied equally upon all. Taxation that levies a tax on one person or one class for the benefit of another person or class is just as much highway robbery as it is to meet a man on the highway and take his money from him. Direct tax is that levied in town or county according to the value of the property you possess. National revenues are indirect. One the internal revenue system, the other the tariff system. Since 1860 this tariff question has received more or less attention, but it has never come to a discussion until recently, although it has always been a plank in the democratic platform. Tariff taxation is levied by the government upon imports brought into this country. For instance, if you make a wagon in the old country in order to bring it here you pay us $25 on that wagon before you can bring it in. Internal taxation is certain revenue. Tariff taxation depends upon whether you import your goods or not. Internal revenue taxation was resorted to in the war because the tariff taxation could not produce enough revenue. Internal revenue taxes were placed upon nearly everything imaginable—on bonds, beer, tobacco, liquors, matches, etc. They were placed upon incomes and upon business. This revenue tax for internal revenue has been all taken off—except the tax on olemargarine, whiskey and tobacco.

The question the people want to decide is how much tariff must be collected, how we shall levy that tax, upon what class of goods shall we put it. The policy of the two parties to-day that are contending for your votes is on this question of tariff. The democrat party was informed by Mr. Cleveland that there was a large surplus in the treasury that had been taken from the people, more than could be used in paying the expenses of the government. Therefore he said there is a danger to your industries. You are turotting your industries. He asked them to reduce the taxes and not take from the people any more money. Both parties grasped the situation. The democrat party introduced the Mills bill in which they professed to make a reduction. They put salt, wool and lumber on the free list, reducing taxation by over $18,000,000 and eleven or twelve million off from sugar, but mind you, left the tax upon all woolen goods and manufactured articles. When a man says the democratic party is taking steps toward free trade he is either an idiot or a liar. The democratic party was never in favor of free trade.

The republican party said, gentlemen we will make necessary reduction of revenue. How? I will read an extract from their platform:

"The republican party would effect all needed reduction of national revenue by repealing the taxes on tobacco, which is a burden to agriculture, (I suppose a boy can't plow unless he chews tobacco) and the taxes upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes, and by such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people. If there shall still remain a larger revenue then is requisite for the wants of the government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system."

There is a tariff on almost every thing we buy and yet the republican party says no reduction of tariff on sugar, manufactured goods, salt, lumber, etc., but "we favor the American system of protection." First, reduce the revenue by taking off from tobacco and by reduction, and if necessary the entire repeal of the whiskey taxes rather than surrender any portion of any other taxes. The democrat platform, is a platform for revenue; the republican platform is a platform for robbery. The republican is to take money out of one man's pocket by increasing the cost and putting it into the manufacturers' pocket. The benefits to be obtained by a tariff on sugar is only to a few factories in Louisiana and you say the Mills bill is sectional. The only particular point in this congressional district for farmers to decide, is, will you consent to the removal of the tariff on wool? We will concede for argument that wool can bring 10 c a pound more by reason of tariff. Thirty million dollars they get for their wool. They raise 400,000,000 bushels of wheat besides what the farmers themselves consume. They pay for everything they buy a tariff on the average of 50 per cent. They get thirty millions for their wool and pay 200 millions for their goods. You are getting $3 and paying $20. It is a skin game, the same as you will see at fairs, circuses, etc.

CONGRESSMAN ALLEN'S SPEECH.

Ladies and Gentlemen—I regret exceedingly that the train which bro't my friend Mr. Stearns was late as it necessitates shortening the discussion. In the brief space of time allotted we cannot begin to touch the skirts of the argument. My friends, the man who cannot get above mere partianship has no business in this country, in considering this tariff question. If a man is going to vote the democratic ticket because he always has, or the republican ticket, then there is no use of having this discussion. The question is to deside to keep your ballots beyond partizanship. It is the same for you as for me, not only for Michigan but for the United States as well. I am obliged to review some of Mr. Stearns points. He is against tariff for protection. I am for tariff for protection, and it is for the American people to decide it, at the coming election, which of the two great principles shall prevail in the U. S. for the next quarter of a century, and whatever they say our loyal and honest men will say amen. It is of no consequence to you whether Mr. Stearns or myself goes to congress. If he had been in Washington representing the second congressional district of Michigan when the Mills bill was brought up he would have voted for it. I voted against it, and it is a question for you to consider. I have nothing to say about millionaires; we would all be millionaires if we could. As to millionaires in the city of Detroit, that city is a democratic city by about 5000 majority. George Washington was a millionaire in the value of lands, compared to his neighbors, and yet no man will say that George Washington was a robber. The second law that was ever passed by the United States was a tariff law, and in that law it expressly said that they must protect the manufacturers of this country. My friend says that taxes must be equal to be just. This is true; nobody disputes that, but a tariff is not a tax. The effect of the tariff is to encourage competition in the home market.

The higher the tariff tax the less revenue you get, and the converse is also true, the lower the tariff, the higher the revenue, and it is an actual act that whenever the tariff has been reduced instead of less money going into the treasury more went in, and the effect of the Mills bill would be to pour more money into the U. S. treasury than you have to-day, so if it is for the reduction of the revenue the bill is a failure.

Mr. Cleveland said in December that there was too much surplus in the treasury. Mr. Cleveland don't know any more than any other man who has had just as good opportunities as he has, and because he is the President it does not follow that it is true. It is true that this administration in the first eleven months never paid a dollar of the public debt, and it is true that there never was a month that the republican party did not pay something on the public debt, while in power.

My brother tells you that this tax is a robbery. He takes special care also to tell you that the democratic party is not for free trade. If you take one of those brick buildings in town and knock out several bricks every year and dig out a stone or two from the foundation and say, ah, no I am not going to knock that building down; it is the same thing. What have they done in the bill we have been fighting? They have taken a great interest in this great state of Michigan and put it on the free list. They have taken salt, lumber, wool and many vegetables and put them on the free list. If that is not free trade it is cutting the dog's tail off piece-by-piece so as not to hurt him. Do you suppose that the farmers would have free wool and your goods be taxed? The result would be, the whole policy of this government would change from protection to tariff for revenue only, which is equal to free trade.

Labor is the foundation of every industry. Ninety per cent of the cost of an article is the labor, and they who strike these industries strike labor. The manufacturer can take care of himself. My friend says to take your wheat over to Europe and buy your goods there. That is what we are fighting about, and we say instead of taking your wheat to Europe and buying your goods there, take that same wheat and let the men of this country eat it up. That is just the question—whether the pauper labor of Europe will make our goods, or the laboring men here.

There was 500,690 sheep in this congressional district according to statistics of 1884, and the wool product was 2 762,000 pounds. The wool question is an important one for you to consider. My friend says free wool benefits the farmer. Mr. Mills said the democratic party was looking out for the sheep, that the wool would grow on the backs of a sheep in the night time as well as the day, and there was no labor in it at all. There is labor in it. In the first place you have to invest your money, you have to care for your sheep, to shear and market. Why the people of this state have spent millions of dollars to improve their wool, and what is the result? They raised the average weight of fleeces from three pounds to five and eight pounds. Talk about wool being raw material. Who is it that works up raw material. Why it is the cheapest prised labor in the U. S. Who is it that digs out iron ore, it is not the man who runs the engine, he is a skilled mechanic. It is the man who digs from day to day at the very hardest work; at work that requires the least skill and consequently receives the least pay. Sugar is left at 68 cents to protect some 70,000 people who are engaged in it, while there are millions of people who are engaged in the wool industry and a product of 200 million pounds a year. Look at the salt industry. You can buy a barrel of salt at Bay City for 60cts, the barrel itself costing 20cts. you get your salt for 40 cents. What effect will the tariff have on the price? Not a particle.

In conclusion I want to ask you my friends who are over 50 years old, whether you do not to-day buy everything necessary in life cheaper than you did before 1861, and also, whether you don't get more for your work to-day than you did before 1861. I say you get goods cheaper than ever before. Why? Because of the competition between the manufacturers of the American goods for the American market. That is the reason. But you are told that the tariff is added to the cost. Steel nails used to cost $100 a ton, but congress put a tariff of $28 on steel rails, and you can buy the same rails for $32 a ton. Unless there had been a tariff on steel rails England would have been making them to-day. Protection gave the American people a chance to build up their factories. The question for you to consider is which is best for this great country—the system in which Washington, Jefferson and Jackson were in favor of, or the opposite? It is free trade as against protection. You can call it by no other name and be honest, and the people understand it as well as you and I do. The question is between two great economic principles one tariff for revenue, another for tariff that shall protect the people of the U. S. in manufacturing and raising things which this country is adapted for. The republican party is in favor of letting into this country everything that we cannot manufacture here.

MR. STEARNS' REPLY.

I am very glad my distinguished friend kicked his own head off the first words he uttered. In his speech in congress he warned congress against the low tariff that prevailed from 1840 to 1860 as causing depression all over the country. Now he says the higher the tariff the lower the revenue. I don't propose to let him tear the seat of his pants by sliding off that republican tariff plank. He must stand on the platform. It is nothing to him how much tariff they take off from sugar. He was asked by the people to use his influence in taking off 12 millions from sugar quarterly and answered, no, not a dollar will I take off from sugar or wool. Talk about the people eating up the wheat here, you can't eat up that wheat. We feed all the mouths and have a large surplus left. As to protecting American laborers, go up into the mines where you have American laborers. 27,000 will vote this year, and out of the 27,000, 7,000 have have not been here a year. I would have voted for the Mills bill. I would vote for it because I want to protect our American laborer. Talk about protecting American laborers; you protect the goods and then import Italians and Scandinavians to do the work and make them. Mr. Allen said they would let everything in free that they did not make in this country. Mr. Allen knows better, and you and I know better. We had to put tin plate on the free list. The republicans would have doubled the tariff. Every industry in this country appealed to Mr. Allen for help. That great editorial power, my friend Applegate got caught between the grinding stones of monopolists and he says Allen, Allen, help from this tight monopoly. I can't help you, but I will give you one of Moreland Bros plugs of tobacco, said Allen. Appregate says is there a congressman who has got courage and backbone enough to stand up and let in type metal free? But Mr. Allen said "you go to the d——l."

The two disputants are well matched. Mr. Allen has the advantage in having given the tariff more study during the past two years but Mr. Stearns seemed to be well posted on the subject. Both men are in vigorous health, have strong lungs and limber tongues. They can both express their views frankly without giving offense and both have the faculty of pleasing their own partizans. Mr. Allen happily replied to his opponent's opening, while Mr. Stearns made some telling hits in his rejoinder. The fact is the debate was well balanced, entertaining and instructive. The glee club sang one Republican and one Democratic song. The three bands made music enough for a whole township. The crowd present must have numbered at least three thousand. Frank DePuy is to be congratulated on his enterprise in getting up the meeting and the citizens of Britton are to be congratulated on their excellent arrangemets for entertaining the crowd. We wish the discussion might be repeated in every town in the district.

Died at the home of her parents in Raisin, Aug. 31st, 1888, Lizzie J. Preston, aged 20 years, 9 months and 13 days. The deceased was born in Antrim Co., Ireland, and came to this country with her parents in her childhood. She was strong and healthy until a little more than a year before her death when she began to show symptoms of that dread disease, consumption. Gradually her life ebbed away. For a long time youth and vigor struggled against the fatal disease, and at last, when hope of this life failed, she bowed in submission to the will of the Master and died in the blessed hope of a better life in the endless hereafter. Her death was a sore affliction to her parents, and they desire to express their gratitude to the many kind friends and neighbors who rendered them every assistance in their power during her long sickness, and at the time of her death. For the past twelve years, until the promulgation of the Chicago platform in June last, all parties have advocated a judicious revision of the tariff and a reduction of our war taxation. Both the Republican and Democratic conventions of 1884 pledged the contesting parties to reduce the surplus. In fact there is no difference of opinion among thinking, practical men of all classes as to the paramount necessity of lopping off the excess, and that is nothing else than a proposition to reduce the surplus in the Treasury without impairing the prosperity of the country.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 10.—The following is the full text of President Cleveland's letter of acceptance. It is dated at Washington, Sept. 8, 1888, and addressed to Hon. Patrick A. Collins and others, committee:

GENTLEMEN: In addressing to you my formal acceptance of the nomination to the presidency of the United States, my thoughts persistently dwell upon the impressive relation of such action to the American people, whose confidence is thus invited, and to the political party to which I belong, just entering upon a contest for continued supremacy. The world does not afford a spectacle more sublime than is furnished when millions of free and intelligent American citizens select their chief magistrate, and bid one of their number to fill the highest earthly honor and the full measure of public duty in ready submission to their will.

It follows that a candidate for this high office cannot forget that when the turmoil and the strife which attend the selection of its incumbent shall be heard no more, there must be in the quiet days which follows a complete and solemn audit by the people of their chosen president of every faculty and endeavor to the service of a wondering and generous nation of freemen. These thoughts are not nullied by the light of my experience in the presidential office, which has solemnized and impressed me with the severe responsibilities which it imposes, while it has quickened my love for American institutions and taught me the priceless value of the trust of my countrymen.

It is of the first importance that those who administer our government should jealously protect and maintain the rights of American citizens at home and abroad, and should strive to achieve for our country her proper place among the nations of the earth; but there is no people whose home interests are so great, and whose numerous objects of domestic concern deserve so much watchfulness and care. Among these are the regulation of a sound financial system suited to our needs, thus securing an efficient agency of national wealth and general prosperity; the construction and equipment of means of defense to insure our national safety and maintain the honor beneath which such national safety repose; the protection of our national domain, still stretching beyond the needs of a century's expansion, and its preservation for the settler and the pioneer of our marvelous growth; a sensible and sincere recognition of the value of American labor, leading to the scrupulous care and just appreciation of the interests of our workingmen; the limitation and checking of such monopolistic tendencies and schemes as interfere with the advantages and benefits which the people may rightly claim; a generous regard and care for our surviving soldiers and sailors and for the widows and orphans of such as have died, to the end that the appreciation of their services and sacrifices is quickened and the application of their pension fund to improper cases may be prevented; protection against a servile immigration which injuriously competes with our laboring men in the field of toil, and adds to our population an element ignorant of our institutions and laws, impossible of assimilation with our people, and dangerous to our peace and welfare; a strict and steadfast adherence to the principles of civil service reform, and a thorough execution of the laws passed for their enforcement, thus permitting to our people the advantages of business methods in the operation of their government; the guaranty to our colored citizens of all their rights of citizenship, and their just recognition and encouragement in all things promoting that relation; a firm, patient, and honorable Indian policy, so that in peace our relations with the government of the Indians of the forest may be promoted, with rights secured and security to the settlers on our frontiers, and the expenditure of public expenses by the introduction of economical methods in every department of the government.

The pledges contained in the platform adopted by the late convention of the national democracy lead to the achievement of these objects, and in the good government the aspiration of every true American citizen and the motive for every patriotic action and effort. In the consciousness that much has been done in the direction of good government by the present administration, and summoning its record to the fair inspection of my countrymen, I endorse the platform thus presented with the determination that, if I am again called to the chief magistracy, there shall be a continuance of devoted endeavor to advance the interests of the entire country.

Our scale of federal taxation and its consequences largely engross at this time the attention of our citizens, and the people are soberly considering the necessity of measures of relief. Our government is the creation of the people, established to carry out their designs and accomplish their good. It was founded on justice, and was made for a free, intelligent and virtuous people. It is only useful when within their control and only serves them well when regulated and guided by their constant touch. It is a free government because it guarantees to every American citizen the unrestricted personal use and enjoyment of all the reward of his toil, and of all his income, except what may be his fair contribution to necessary public expense. Therefore it is not only the right but the duty of a free people, in the enforcement of this guaranty, to insist that such expense should be strictly limited to the actual public needs. It seems perfectly clear that when the government—this instrumentality created and maintained by the people to do their bidding—turns upon them and, through an utter perversion of its powers, extorts from their labor and capital tribute largely in excess of public necessities, the creature has rebelled against the creator and the exactors are robbed by their servants.

The cost of the government, and customs to be met by tariff duties collected at our custom houses upon imported goods, and internal revenue taxes assessed upon spirituous and malt liquors and upon tobacco manufactures, are so well known to the people of this country that all this story of the amount upon which they are levied, and of the fact that these taxes are a tax upon the consumer who pays these articles for his own consumption, I do not deem it well to rehearse. It is plain, too, that it is well understood that the effect of this tariff taxation is not limited to the enhancement of imported articles, but that the duty imposed upon such articles permits a corresponding increase in price to be paid upon the same products of the same kind, which have not paid a dollar to the revenue, to our citizen producers, who thus have a tax upon their industry levied for their benefit in the form of an increased price for their product. This has led to the belief that the tariff taxation is not limited to the enhancement of imported articles, but that the duty imposed upon such articles permits a corresponding increase in price to be paid upon domestic products, to the same kind, which have not paid a dollar to the revenue, to our citizen producers, who thus have a tax upon their industry levied for their benefit in the form of an increased price for their product. This has led to the belief that the tariff taxation is not limited to the enhancement of imported articles, but that the duty imposed upon such articles permits a corresponding increase in price to be paid upon domestic products of consumption free, 25 per cent would compensate for the higher cost of labor insurance, machinery and perhaps interest and local taxes. To this should be added the enhanced cost of other materials consumed in the manufacture, in consequence of the duties imposed thereon, such as silk yarns, soaps, chemicals, oils, etc. For these 5 per cent additional making in all 30 per cent ad valorem, would place the business on a healthy basis, in my opinion."

The Mills bill makes raw wool free and leaves forty per cent on manufactured fabrics.

In the small compass of a newspaper article it is impossible to give minor details. The evidence given above is condensed into the briefest space, but the salient points in this controversy are touched upon and the arguments advanced are irrefutable. It is an overwhelming and undeniable fact that the woolen industry of the Union is in a very depressed condition notwithstanding the fostering care of an exorbitant tariff. Once give our manufacturers a fair chance with those of England, place them on an equal footing by giving them free raw materials, and our idle mills would again become hives of industry. Was there ever such suicidal folly committed by an honest government as this attempt to build up our declining wool industries by taxing them to death?

Secondly—Would the Mills bill benefit the wage worker in our woolen mills?

This query has already been partially answered, but we will add a few suggestions from the standpoint of the laborer alone. In the first place, that policy which would aid the woolen mill owner, which would increase the output of his goods, which would start up the woolen mills that are now idle, and establish new plant of a similar character, would of course increase the demand for skilled labor. Woolen mill operatives would not only get more work to do, but they would receive higher wages. This proposition is as plain as a pikestaff. Plenty of work means good wages. If there are ten men fitted to do a certain class of work and only eight men at hand, the demand for labor exceeds the supply and wages rise. If ten men are needed to do the work and twelve are obtainable, the supply exceeds the demand and wages fall. On the 30th of June last a huge petition from the woolen mill operatives in Philadelphia was presented to Congress and printed in the Record. In this petition they take exactly the view above stated. Nearly one-half the woolen goods used in this country are now manufactured abroad—exactly 47½ per cent. A policy that would put our own manufacturers on an equal footing with those of England would transfer the making of these goods from English to American looms and double the demand for woolen workers. We quote this significant passage:

"We fail to see how the wool growers are benefitted by the tariff on wool, as it inevitably restricts the market for their wool, both by forcing the use of substitutes and by promoting the importation of wool in the manufactured state, all of which must redound to the injury of both the wool grower and the woolen worker."

The present monstrosity forces the use of adulterants in large quantities, in the place of which domestic wool ought to be used, but cannot be used except at a loss. To make marketable cloth from these adulterants requires more skill than from pure wool, neither can the workmen turn out as much cloth. These causes tend to curtail his wages. We take this table showing the proportion of adulterants in woolen goods, from the census of 1880.

	Pounds.
Domestic wool	222,991,531
Foreign wool	73,200,698
Camel's hair	1,583,119
Mohair	159,678
Buffalo hair	671,027
Hair of other animals	5,664,142
Cotton	48,000,857
Shoddy	52,163,926
Total raw material	404,434,978

The item of "domestic wool" is wool in the grease, which represents 118,476,891 pounds of pure wool. Thus the adulterants of woolen goods made in 1880 were as 108 pounds of adulterants, hair, shoddy, cotton, etc., to 118 parts of pure wool. Suppose pure wool could take the place of these adulterants. What an enormous gain would result to both the wool grower and the woolen worker. Enact this reform into law and the laborer would be benefitted in various ways. It would largely increase the demand for labor. The workman would procure more work and he would receive better wages for what he did. The use of pure wool in place of adulterants would enable him to make more and better cloth, and thus stimulate the price of his labor. As a consumer he would buy all his woolens at a saving of 20 per cent., and all the other necessaries he has to buy to support his family would be cheapened in a liberal proportion. He would secure more work; he would receive more money for his work; his money would buy more clothing, more furniture, more of all the necessaries of life. As Congressman Mills so tersely puts it:

"Free raw materials make low cost of products; low cost of products makes increase of markets; increase of markets makes increased demand for goods; increased demand for goods makes increased demand for employment; and increased demand for employment makes increase of wages."

Thirdly—Would free wool help the consumer of woolens? An affirmative answer to this question is self-evident. It needs no argument to prove it, for it is patent to every man who has studied this question. A reduction of tariff duty by 20 per cent. would reduce the retail price of woolens to the consumer by almost exactly the same figure. From the census of 1880 are gathered the following statistics of the consumption of woolen goods and the increase of cost occasioned by the tariff. The cost of woolen goods to the people of the United States in 1880 was $511,561,228. Here are the items of increase as given by Hon. Wm. M. Springer in his great wool speech:

Forty per cent. increase on home made goods, (1880)	$168,873,165
Duties paid on imported fabrics	21,152,070
Twenty-five per cent. on these two items as expenses, commission, etc.	32,006,308
Total tariff increase	$160,031,543

In 1880 we had fifty million inhabitants. The total cost of woolen goods in round numbers was in that year $10 to each person, or for a family of five, $50. The enhanced cost by reason of tariff duties would be $3.20 per capita, or $16 to a family of five persons. These figures are remarkably modest and cannot be disputed.

The average population of each congressional district in 1880 was 134,000. To-day about 150,000. Hence the woolen goods consumed in each district would represent in round numbers $1,500,000, and the tariff burden to each district would be $480,000. It is safe to say that the increased consumption of woolen fabrics since 1880, has been ten per cent., that it has kept pace with the increase of population. On that basis the tariff burden for the present year would be $528,000 to each congress district. Every man, woman and child in the land is mulcted in the sum of $3.29 per year to uphold a system of protection, which experience has demonstrated to be no protection at all. How could political infatuation go farther?

Fourthly—How would a tariff enactment, on the basis of the Mills bill, effect the wool grower?

We have already given many statistics, affording valuable information and furnishing weighty evidence on this point, but we present a few additional suggestions to strengthen our position. At the outset we maintain that the price of wool, like that of all other farm products, is regulated chiefly by the law of supply and demand. While the tariff may have an indirect and remote effect on prices by establishing the business status of certain lines of industry, the real regulating cause of price is the great law of demand and supply. This law has never been stated more clearly than by Bastiat in his "Sophisms of Protection." He says:

1.—Prices rise either on account of augmented demand or diminished supply.

2.—They fall by reason of an augmentation of the supply or diminution of the demand.

There are two kinds of dearness and two kinds of cheapness. There is a bad dearness, which results from diminution of supply, for it implies privation and scarcity. There is a good dearness, that which results from an increase of demand, for this indicates the augmentation of general wealth.

There is also a good cheapness, resulting from abundance, and there is a baleful cheapness, such as results from the cessation of demand or the inability of consumers to purchase.

Now, compare the working of this principle under the present monopoly tariff and under the reform proposed by the Mills bill. As shown above, in the first subdivision of this paper, the placing of wool on the free list would enable our own woolen mills to compete with foreign mills for the American market. The 47½ per cent. of woolen fabrics consumed by our people, and now made abroad, would be manufactured at home. Our woolen mills now consume 300,000,000 lbs of domestic wool. Suppose they made all the woolens used in this country, they would absorb 600,000,000 pounds annually. True, they would import about 100,000,000 pounds more, but the importations then, as now, would be of fine and coarse grades not raised here, for mixing purposes. Again, pure home wool would take the place of adulterants now used in manufacture, which would absorb 108,000,000 pounds annually of raw wool. These causes combined would increase the demand for home wool an hundred fold in a few months.

Now, will some high tariff sophist please inform us how in the name of common sense it can injure the wool grower to double the demand for his product? Again, certain grades of wool are imported which are not and cannot be raised in the United States, to mix with ours. Let the bars down and admit that wool free, and it would increase the demand enormously for domestic wool. Our manufacturers could not only hold the entire home market, but could successfully fight for a footing in foreign markets, and thus extend their trade beyond the seas. And this extension of trade would create a still further demand for domestic wool. The evidence of our best experts is well nigh unanimous on this point. We quote from the letter of the Home Woolen Mills Company, in Manning's Report on the Revision of the Tariff:

"The duty on wool is a damage to the wool grower. A moderate tariff on manufactured goods, with free wool, would not raise prices of the fabrics so as to interfere with full consumption by the laboring classes. It would be of more benefit to the wool grower than to the manufacturer, as it would start up and increase the machinery and make a demand for the wool. It would give the grower what he most needs—customers and competitors for his wool. The home grown will be used so far as suitable before the imported. Under the same conditions it will have the preference. Free wool would raise prices abroad to a point that would make the cost here such as to enable our growers to compete favorably on the qualities adapted to their several localities. It would give them a steady market and tend to bring them into direct communication, saving the profits of speculators. It is now seldom the case that the grower gets the advantage of an advance in market values."

Every sentence in this extract hits the nail squarely, and every one would constitute a good text for a magazine article. They cover the ground completely.

But, our high tariff objector will say, "This is all theory." True, it is theory, but it has been proven true by that strongest of all arguments, the test of experience. Bastiat, one of our best authorities on political economy, says:

"In France, to protect the farmer, a law was passed imposing a duty of 22 per cent. upon imported wools, and the result has been that native wools have sold for much lower prices than before the passage of the law. In England a law in behalf of the consumers was passed exempting foreign wools from duty, and the consequence has been that native wools have sold higher than ever before."

An investigation of the retail prices of wool in the United States during the past fifty years reveals the same truth. Prior to April 1816, wool was on the "free list," that is, it was not subjected to duty. By that act a duty was placed on wool of 15 per cent. ad valorem. Since that time the tariff duty on wool or woolen goods has been subjected to 17 changes. In 1824 the duty was raised on both raw wool and fabrics, and again in 1828. With a few slight changes the duty remained the same till the passage of the Walker tariff of 1846, which has been called the "free trade" tariff. This act remained in force wholly for eleven years, until 1857. By the act of March 3d, 1857, the duty was still further reduced, and raw wool valued at 20 cents per pound was placed on the free list. By the act of March 2d, 1861, the duty was increased slightly, and raw wool was taken off the free list. In 1864 another change was made. This act made four distinct classes, on which the duty ranged from three cents to twelve cents per pound. By the act of March 2, 1867, the duty was raised to the top-notch point on both wool and woolens, viz.: 10 and 12 cents per pound, and 11 and 10 per cent. ad valorem. A horizontal reduction of only 10 per cent. was made in 1872 and this was repealed in 1875. The act of March 3, 1883 is substantially the same as that of 1867, the line of division between the minimum and maximum rate being simply reduced from 32 to 30 cents per pound and the small ad valorem rate of 10 per cent. abolished.

These statistics, as also the following table, are taken from Secretary Manning's revision report. We also reproduce the table published August 23d, showing F. A. Dewey's prices since 1840. Mr. Dewey has been a leading farmer of Lenawee county since 1835. The figures are taken from his annual diaries and can be relied upon as accurate. They show the actual retail prices received by a producer in one of the richest agricultural counties of the Union. From 1862 to 1877 inclusive the prices are given in currency and the gold equivalent.—Dewey's prices are in currency. For convenience of reference the two tables are combined in one.

From a careful study of these figures, in the light of the tariff changes noted above, we deduce these conclusions:

1st—The tariff does not fix the price of wool. It fluctuates from year to year under the same tariff. Under the "free trade" tariff of 1846 it ran from 28 cents in '48 to 50½ cents in '53. Under the top notch tariff of 1867 it ran from 60 cents in '72 to 22 cents in '88.

2d—A low tariff produces a temporary decline, followed by a steady rise. A high tariff produces a temporary advance, followed by a steady decline.

3d—Taking a series of years prices range considerably higher under a low tariff than under a high one.

A few averages from this table yield some very striking results. An average of 15 years of low tariff from '46 to '61, gives 42 cents on Manning's table and 38 cents on Dewey's table. The average of 17 years of high tariff—from '68 to '84—reduced to a gold basis is 42 cents. If we had the figures of the last 4 years of low prices the average would drop to at least 41 cents. Reducing Dewey's currency prices to a gold basis, deducting the same difference each year between currency and gold as shown in Manning's table, and striking an average for 21 years under high tariff from '67 to '88, it gives 33 cents. The fractions are omitted in both cases. Taking a series of years Mr. Dewey got five cents less under high tariff than under a low one. Again under the free trade tariff he received within four cents of the Boston market. Under the high tariff of '67 he received nine cents less than the Boston market. In other words, under our present monopoly tariff middlemen and speculators flourish at the farmers' expense. In the light of these figures, the claim that high tariff makes high prices is too silly and puerile to require serious comment. And yet there are hundreds of honest men who will swallow this musty old protection chestnut and consider it digestible and palatable food.

The competition which threatens the wool grower of the Northwest does not come from Australia and South America, but from Texas and the western territories, and this latter competition will remain the same as now, or increase, tariff or no tariff.

Placing wool on the free list would put a quietus to "tariff tinkering." It would place our manufactures on a solid foundation and impart to them a steady and healthy growth. England raises wool at a profit with wool free, on land valued at $500 per acre. This is one great cause of the expansion of her woolen trade. Give our own woolen mills the same stable basis to rest upon and they would soon drive English woolens out of this market and double the demand for home wool.

This tariff iniquity is like a two-edged sword—it cuts both ways. It gives us a bad cheapness by curtailing and restricting the demand for domestic wool, thus forcing down the price of raw wool, closing our woolen factories, throwing our laborers out of employment and reducing their wages. It gives us a bad dearness by raising the price of manufactured fabrics to an exorbitant figure, thus checking their sale, reducing the demand for them, and carrying hardship and want into every poor man's household. The reform contemplated by the Mills bill would produce exactly the opposite effect. It would give us a good cheapness by reducing the retail price of woolen fabrics, thus bestowing a direct benefit on every consumer in the land. It would give us a good dearness by stimulating the demand for domestic wool, thus raising the price thereof, putting our idle looms in motion, giving our idle workmen employment and raising their wages.

Why do the high tariff advocates cling to the wool schedule with such bulldog tenacity? The wool duty is a sop to the farmer. Strike out the agricultural link and the monopoly chain would be irretrievably severed. The farmer is robbed and plundered on nearly everything he buys for household, farm or family use. In return for this plunder the high tariff goddess graciously offers him a "mess of pottage" called a "wool duty," which grants him a protection that does not protect. How long will the farmers of the Northwest permit a few political charlatans to "pull the wool over their eyes" in this fashion?

WM. C. SHARP.

TO YOU PERSONALLY.

DEAR SIR:

We wish to call your attention to three facts concerning THE INTERNATIONAL CYCLOPEDIA.

1. It is the most comprehensive Cyclopedia in the world. There is perhaps only one other that contains as many titles, and that is condensed into three volumes, the value of its large number of subjects is marred by the necessarily brief and unsatisfactory manner in which they are treated. THE INTERNATIONAL in fifteen large, but not unwieldy, Royal Octavo volumes, can treat of its 50,000 titles with a degree of fullness sufficient to their importance. It is the fullest, not only in number of titles, but in the relative amount of matter given each title.

2. It has the advantage of being International. The Brittanica is lamentably deficient in American matter, and Appleton's is silent on many foreign subjects of interest. In THE INTERNATIONAL, the articles on foreign men, places, histories, laws, etc., are written chiefly by foreigners of distinction, while the articles pertaining to American interests have been prepared almost entirely by American editors. This gives THE INTERNATIONAL a COMPLETENESS wanting in other Cyclopedias.

3. It is the cheapest Cyclopedia of its size in the world. The Brittanica in its cheapest form costs $120. Appleton's in its cloth binding costs $85, which is more than we charge for THE INTERNATIONAL in its finest Morocco binding.

There are many other points showing the superiority of THE INTERNATIONAL over other works of reference. We merely select these three, urging them upon your earnest consideration.

We shall be glad to correspond with you further. Please reply.

Yours truly,

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

The convention came to order shortly after 11 o'clock, and Alexander Richard, of Raisin, was chosen temporary chairman. John Gahagan was selected temporary secretary.

R. M. Boyd, Arnold Graves and Seth Paul were appointed a committee on credentials. Seth Bean, Wm. M. Corbet and W. D. McCann, were selected as a committee on permanent organization and order of business, and the convention then adjourned until afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The convention was called to order at 1:30, and the report of the committee on credentials was made and accepted.

The committee on permanent organization reported, the temporary chairman was retained, and George D. Moore was chosen secretary.

Senator—Edwin Haff.
Probate Judge—O. Lamb.
Clerk—Ira Waterman.
Prosecutor—Fred B. Wood.
Treasurer—Henry Finger.
Sheriff—F. D. Teachout.
Register—Edwin Morse.
Surveyor—A. L. Arner.

The County Committee was authorized to fill the nominations for two circuit court commissioners and two coroners, after which the convention adjourned.

The ticket is well distributed geographically and every candidate has personal strength in his own locality. It is a ticket that will wear.

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A serial story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD, both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

What's the matter with the Democratic ball club? Must have heard from Maine and the news unsettled their nerve. In the game with the Republicans Tuesday, they received a black eye by a score of 10 to 3, and strange to say, they don't lay the blame to the umpire. The same batteries were put in and Loomis was knocked out of the box in the first round.

Partial returns from the Maine election Tuesday morning indicated a Republican plurality of 20,000. At the state election in 1884 they had 19,745. The full returns are coming in very slowly and their plurality has dropped to 18,000 with a downward tendency, showing a Democratic gain of about 2,000. The same ratio of gain in Michigan will swing this state for Cleveland by a good majority.

A. E. Kennedy has a new automatic chocolate cupboard. Drop a nickel in the slot, and a neat box of chocolate candy will appear in the tray at the bottom. Bogus pennies make no impression on the critter. A five-dollar gold piece might entice it to give down, but we doubt it. The interior arrangement is such that it will respond to nothing but a five-cent nickel.

The Republicans raised one of the prettiest poles of the season last Saturday evening at the corner of Brown and Mill Streets. It is straight as an arrow and stands 110 feet in the air with a Harrison & Morton streamer decorating the upper portion. There was a large crowd present and music was furnished by the city band. The meeting was addressed by J. D. Shull and Hon. Geo. Howell, whose remarks were appropriate to the occasion.

We clip the following from the San Jose Daily Times, which will be of interest to Brock's old friends in Tecumseh.

Yesterday S. B. Anderson, known to his chums as "Brock," was made the recipient of a very handsome gold watch, together with a chain and charm, by the employes of the Golden Gate Packing company, of which firm Mr. Anderson has been the bookkeeper during the past four years. The presentation speech was made on behalf of the donors by A. H. Washburn and was a complete surprise to Mr. Anderson. As is usual in such cases the recipient, after he became fully aware of what had happened, managed to blurt out his hearty thanks and all ended happily and both sides were pleased. The watch came very appropriately as it is only a few weeks since Mr. Anderson's home was entered by thieves and his gold watch, together with gold watches belonging to his wife and mother, were stolen.

Tons and tons of celery are leaving this market every week now.

Thanks to Will Anderson for a prime sample of Dr. Stewart's celery.

Miss. Lillie Ingersoll has gone to Ypsilanti to assist in a musical entertainment, with her cornet, to be given there this week.

The employees of Smith's paper mill raised a fine hickory pole last week from the top of which floats a Cleveland and Thurman streamer.

What was the secret of Dr. Howell's defeat for the State Senate? Is it true that the Michigan Brewers' Association are setting up their pins to control that body?

The ladies aid society of the M. E. church will convene in the church parlors for the first monthly meeting of the year on Wed. Sep. 19. Supper will be served by Mrs Hause's committee.

The Prohibition representative conventions for Lenawee county will all be held next week. The 1st district at Blissfield, Monday, Sept. 17; the 2d at Adrian, Sept. 21; the third at Clayton Sept. 22

A special train bound to the G. A. R. encampment at Columbus passed down the Jackson Branch Monday forenoon. There were eight coaches attached and the headquarters car was beautifully trimmed with bunting and banners. About twenty-five members of Beers Post went along.

We gave Ed. Hollister a brief call at the Tecumseh Celery farm last week. He has an admirable method of washing his celery, the power being furnished by a four-horse engine and rotary pump. The shipments from this firm have already begun and they are sending off large quantities daily.

Hon. A. C. Cadwell of Ionia, is visiting his aged sister, Mrs. C. Woodard, this week. Mr. C. is 78 years old and appears well for a person of his advanced age. He with his sister are the only surviving members of their family, their brothers and sisters having all passed away to the better land.

While C. H. Dewey and his daughter Linda were out on a drive last Sunday afternoon, some sheep beside the road near Willard Smith's farm frightened the horse. The horse sprang to one side, upsetting the buggy and throwing the occupants to the ground. Both were badly bruised and Mr. Dewey has been confined to his bed ever since.

A good crowd assembled at George Hanford's farm in Raisin, Saturday afternoon, and raised a fine hickory pole, from the top of which a Cleveland & Thurman banner was flung to the breeze. After the pole was in position, short speeches were made by Alex. Richard of Raisin and Capt. Wood of this village, our candidate for prosecutor. The meeting was an unqualified success.

Joseph P. McCarthy, of Albion, and the South Raisin glee club, of Petersburgh, will talk and sing for the new party at Blissfield, Monday, Sept. 17, afternoon and evening. Deerfield, on Tuesday evening, Sept. 18; Fairfield, Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 19; Clayton, Thursday, Sept. 20th, afternoon and evening; Adrian, Friday, Sept. 21, afternoon and evening; Ridgeway, on Saturday evening, Sept. 22.

Last Saturday afternoon at four o'clock, the Prohibition clans gathered at J. S. Kinney's store and hoisted a beautiful cold water pole 134 feet in height. A Fisk & Brooks streamer was unfurled from the top and the crowd then passed across the street to the opera house and listened to a good talk from Hon. Chas. M. Fellows, their nominee for Congress. His speech was not a lengthy one but he made an excellent impression.

Moderator—A. W. Mills.
Director—L. G. North.
Assessor—O. P. Bills.

Standing committees for the coming year:

On Supplies—Brewer, Bills, Mills.
On Buildings and Grounds—North, Brewer, Hardenburg.
On Finance—Bills, Hardenberg, North.
On Teachers—Mills, Hardenberg Brewer.

The death of Mrs. Charles Wells of Franklin occured last week. Mrs. Wells, whose maiden name was Welch, was far advanced in years, and the mother of a family of six children grown to man and womanhood. She had passed three score and ten years allotted to mankind, but has ever been held in high respect by a large acquaintance, and none esteemed her more highly than the writer of this, who in early life was encouraged to a better work by her wise counsel and kindly sympathy. To the sorrowing family we extend the most sincere sympathy. A venerable mother has gone to her reward.—Press.

Francis Labadie at the Opera House Tuesday evening.

Frank Rosacrans of Kansas is visiting friends in town.

The first carload of cabbage of the season is being shipped south to day by the Tecumseh Celery Co.

Mrs. Alfred James and daughter Elida gave an afternoon reception yesterday which was largely attended.

This week we give our readers Mr. Cleveland's letter of acceptance, and next week we will print Gen. Harrison's letter.

The big Thurman mass meeting in New York city last week was the largest political gathering held in that city since the war.

Al. Lawrence of Arkansas City, Kan., arrived in town this morning for a short visit. He has been attending the G. A. R. reunion at Columbus.

The Ypsilanti ball club suffered an inglorious defeat at the hands of the Tecumseh's yesterday afternoon. The score stood 13 to 4 The home team played a strong game, and Coddling's pitching was brilliant.

The Republican congressional convention assembled at Adrian yesterday and went through the formality of renominating Capt. Allen for congress. He was present and made a good speech accepting the nomination.

The wife of Hon. J. K. Boies of Hudson, after an illness of several weeks passed over to the other shore on Monday last. Her death will be a serious loss, not only to the family but to the community in which she lived.

Richard Caldwell of Franklin, has invented a new changeable wagon-rack, called the "Common Sense" rack. It can be changed into a hay or stock rack or double wagon box. He is attending the State fair this week exhibiting his invention.

Secetary, E. L. Mills informs us that the prospects are good for an excellent show at the County Fair this year. More entries than usual are coming in, and he looks for a big crowd and a fine exhibition. September 25th is the first day.

The Prohibitionists will hold a caucus at the council room, on Friday evening of this week, at 7:30 o'clock, to nominate six delegates to attend the representative convention, to be held in Blissfield next Monday afternoon, September 17th.

The army worm is attacking shade trees about the village very badly. Cutting off the tops of the tree will, it is claimed, stop their ravages. The worms crawl down the trunk of the tree at night and huddle on the windward side, when they can be scraped off and burned.

Hanford & Southworth have formed a partnership and are cultivating twenty acres of celery on Geo. Hanford's farm. They call it the "Willow Bank Celery Farm." We gave them a short call the other day and found them nicely started, and they expect to raise an article that will compete with the best.

On Tuesday evening, Sept. 18, the two famous artists, Mr. Francis Labadie and Miss Hattie Rowell will give a production of the celebrated mythological comedy "Pygmalion and Galatea" at the opera house. This play is by the author of "Pinafore," "Patience," "Iolanthe," etc. Mr. Labadie has appeared before Tecumseh audiences several times and has always had good houses, and we bespeak the same on this occasion. Tickets for this performance will be given with every $2.00 sale (or over) at the store of Harris & Hitshue.

The Democrats of the first district held their representative convention at Tecumseh yesterday afternoon. Alex. Richards was chairman and D. McNair secretary. All the towns in the district were represented except Deerfield. Wm. M. Corbett and C. M. Lowe were placed in nomination for representative. Mr. Lowe declined and Mr. Corbett was then made the nominee by acclamation. The following district committee was chosen: Blissfield, F. J. Stein; Clinton, E. R. Smith; Deerfield, James Manning; Macon, I. C. Mills; Ogden, B. L. Hicks; Palmyra, Lewis Smith; Riga, August Glasser; Raisin, Alex. Richard; Ridgeway, Wm. H. Arner; Tecumseh, D. McMair. Mr. McNair was elected chairman. The convention then adjourned.

Mr. Rudolph Heesen and Miss Flora Roof were united in marriage at the residence of the bride, last Tuesday evening, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Babbitt at 7:30 o'clock, and the bridal pair took the night train for Chicago. A number of friends were present from South Bend and other points to take part in the festivities. The wedding gifts bestowed were numerous and appropriate. The groom is one of our leading young business men. The bride has been favorably known here for the past few years and has many friends. The HERALD adds its word of congratulation to the many good wishes they will receive as they set sail upon life's matrimonial voyage.

HON. CHARLES M. FELLOWS.

A Short Interview with the Prohibition Candidate for Congress in this District.

Charles M. Fellows, of Sharon, the Prohibition nominee for Congress in this district, made a good speech and a good impression at the Kinney pole raising last Saturday afternoon. During the evening and while waiting for the night train he was introduced to many of our citizens, and favored the HERALD with a short call. We took advantage of his visit to propound a few questions to him on political issues, and found him ready to express his views frankly. Mr. Fellows was born in Sharon 53 years ago, and has lived in that town ever since. He owns a large farm of 270 acres and has been engaged in sheep raising very extensively for a number of years. His sheep now represent an investment of over $12,000. He has long been known among "sheep men" as one of the leading wool growers in Michigan. Mr. Fellows is a thick set, stocky man, slightly bald, with strong features and a pleasing address. He has the general appearance of a well-to-do farmer and of a man who could adapt himself equally well to business. Although he does not claim to be a public speaker, he is well posted on current politics, and has a frank, fluent way of expressing his sentiments, that people can understand and appreciate. He is a graduate of the State Normal School and was a classmate of both Stearns and Allen in that institution. Below are the questions submitted to him and his answers thereto as taken by our reporter.

"How long have you acted with the Prohibition party?"

"I have been identified with that party for the past twelve years."

"How do you like your national nominations—Fisk and Brooks—and what are the prospects for the national ticket?"

"I am well pleased with the ticket. They are both able men and will rally to their standard the full prohibition strength. I think our party will poll more votes this fall than ever before, and in many states it will hold the balance of power."

"What is the outlook for the Prohibition party in this state?"

"It is good, and better than at any former period in its history. I am confident that we will increase our vote over two years ago and four years ago. I consider the party better organized in this state than ever before. The rank and file are enthusiastic and our full strength will be brought to the polls. There will be no stragglers in our ranks this fall in Michigan."

"What will be your vote in this Congressional district as compared with two years ago?"

"Two years ago, on a light vote, our nominee for Congress not only held the vote of 1884, but increased it slightly. This fall there will be a largely increased vote, and I feel very sanguine that our Congressional vote will show its full percentage of increase as compared with the old parties. In fact I believe that we shall make a good gain, not only in the actual poll, but also in our percentage. I expect to hold the full party vote this fall on the Congressional ticket."

"Do you intend to make a thorough canvass of the district and get out every vote possible for Prohibition, regardless of its effect on either of the old parties?"

"I have no sympathy with either of the old parties. I intend to go around the district and make as full a canvass as my time and private business affairs will permit. I do not intend to be a laggard in this fight, but shall do my full share to further the cause of the Prohibition party in this district. Temperance men in both the old parties begin to see that a vote for a so-called temperance candidate counts for naught, so long as the party to which he belongs takes no positive or decided stand upon that question, and for this reason we look for a large increase in our vote."

"What are your views on the mooted question of protection and tariff reform, which seems to be the great issue between the old parties?"

"While I have my views on these topics I consider them subordinate to that of prohibition. While the wool question is an important one for Michigan farmers I think that the loss to the manhood and resources of this state occasioned by the liquor traffic is a question of far more importance. I believe in protecting American industries, but I believe in protecting American homes more. Protecting American youth is of more importance than protecting American products, as much as a man is better than a sheep. Free wool does not alarm me any. This is a complex question, and I do not claim to be an expert on it, but my opinion is that the price of wool is regulated upon business principles of supply and demand as well as upon import duty."

Mr. Fellows made an excellent impression during his brief visit here, and will probably come to Tecumseh again before the campaign closes.

THE SMITTEN ROCK.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 16.

Text of the Lesson, Num. xx. 1-13—Commit Verses 7, 8—Golden Text, 1 Cor. x. 4—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. The first verse of our lesson finds the people once more at Kadesh, just where we left them in our last lesson (xiii, 26). Thirty-eight years have passed since the spies searched out the land, the forty years from Egypt have now about expired (compare xix, 28, and xxxiii, 38), and they are again at the borders of the promised land. Of the history of these thirty-eight years we know almost nothing; it was time lost because of disobedience, and they have made no progress. Here is brought before us a weighty principle which we would do well to consider. When Abram left Bethel and went down to Egypt because of the famine he was out of communion with God, and found only trouble until he got back to Bethel. (Gen. xii, 10; xiii, 3.) When he listened to Sarai concerning Hagar, which was a suggestion of the flesh, we find a blank in his life of thirteen years. (Gen. xvi, 16; xvii, 1.) If you would reconcile the apparent discrepancy between the 480 years of 1 Kings vi, 1, and the 513 years of Acts xiii, 17-21, plus David's 40 and 2 of Solomon, total 573, you have only to add up the lost time of the captivities of Judges iii, 8, 14; iv, 2, 3; vi, 1; xiii, 1, which gives you 93 lost years when the nation was out of fellowship with God because of sin; this subtracted from 573 gives 480 and proves both records correct. When we can look at things from God's standpoint we shall find all the apparent contradictions in Scripture vanish as mist before the sun. In the law of the Nazarite (Num. vi, 12) whenever he was defiled by any uncleanness, the days of his defilement were lost; so every day or hour in which we are not practically separated to God is just time lost, for all is as lost that is not done in fellowship with God.

2. "No water, * * * they gathered against Moses." At Marah the bitter waters had been made sweet, and at Rephidim abundance of water had been brought from the smitten rock for them (Ex. xv, xvii), but they were so forgetful and unbelieving.

3-5. "Would God that we had died." Those who seem so anxious for death are not always the most ready when it comes; and those who are really ready for that great change are generally content to leave the time and way to Him who orders all things for the best to those who love Him. "To die is gain" for all those who can truly say "for me to live is Christ." To depart and be with Christ is far better than even suffering as Paul endured, and yet Paul was willing to endure, knowing that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

6. "They fell upon their faces, and the glory of the Lord appeared unto them." Thus did Moses and Aaron, and this is our wisdom in every difficulty. We rest on Thee, O Lord our God, let not man prevail against us! was the cry of Asa. O our God, we have no might, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon Thee! was the prayer of Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. xiv, 11; xx, 12), and in each case it was a great victory. More humiliation of self in the sight of our God, and whole hearted reliance upon Him, with a readiness to do whatever He says or be still and see Him work, would save us more often from sin.

7, 8. "Take the rod, speak unto the rock." The directions were simple, and all that was required of Moses was simple and implicit obedience to these orders, and the results would follow, just as the Lord said. The rod had been entrusted to Divine hands and was a symbol of God's power, that water could be had from a rock; that water could be had from them, and if there was any deficiency in the supply it was because of their failure to properly use and lead them back to Him, for He would have us draw our supplies from Him daily. Christ our rock has been once smitten, once for all, and the supply of living water is abundant. Our sins were laid on Him on Calvary, He made propitiation for the sins of the whole world; He now lives to make intercession for all who accept the forgiveness thus obtained. There is no more laying sins on Him, no more bruising of Him; but if we transgress and the stream of grace runs low to us, we have only to speak to Him in honest confession and there shall be cleansing and restoration.

9. "Moses took the rod from before the Lord." After the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram, the rod of Aaron which budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds, all in one night, was laid up before the Lord to be kept for a token against the rebels and their murmurings (xvii, 8-10); this rod Moses was to take in his hand as a witness against them when he went forth to speak to the rock.

10. "Must we fetch you water out of this rock?" Although they had been on their faces before God, they still prove themselves but weak and sinful mortals; the flesh, the old man, is not reckoned dead, and the Holy Spirit is grieved. All the Moses and Aarons that ever lived could not fetch a drop of water of any rock, but God hath said: "Speak, and it shall give forth his water." The sun gives its light and heat, and the clouds give their rain, but all the philosophers and scientists of the age cannot fetch either light or heat from the sun or a drop of rain from the clouds. God has given to us His Son, and in Him all blessings temporal and spiritual for time and eternity. We have only to open to Him that He may come in and feast us with His fullness.

11. "He smote the rock twice." A gracious God would not let even this rebellious people suffer because of the sin of His servant Moses, and so "the water came out abundantly." One has said that "Grace triumphed spite of Moses' failure," and is it not just so every day? Who is there that serves God without sin? And yet He permits such sinful messengers as we are to be channels of blessing to others.

12. "Ye believed me not, to sanctify me." The eyes of Israel were by the words of Moses and Aaron directed to them, and not to the Lord, as if Moses and Aaron were supplying their need. It is written, "I am the Lord; that is My name, and My glory will I not give to another" (Isa. xlii, 8), and again, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (I Cor. i, 31). Whenever as teachers or preachers we allow the eyes of the people to rest on us or our talents or our wisdom we are then failing to sanctify the Lord before them and disqualifying ourselves to be their leaders.

13. "He was sanctified in them." Whatever be the sin and failure of the people or their leaders God will through it all maintain the glory of his name. That name is recorded in Ex. xxxiv, 5-7, as "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious," etc., and truly His mercy and grace are magnified in this lesson. It all seems to come home to us, saying: Let Him who redeemed you have His own way with you, and rejoice thou in Him; let Him lead you as He will, and follow thou closely, resting in His love, and let your song ever be, not I, but Christ; magnify His holy name.

On the Camp Ground.

A Host of Old Veterans Gather at Columbus.

OVER 150,000 VISITORS ON HAND.

All the Veterans Well Cared for and Room for More—Arrival of "Old Tecump" and Commander Rhea—The Sons of Veterans' Reception—Telling Stories Around the Camp Fire—The West Present in Force—Candidates for the Chief Office.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 11.—All of Sunday night and yesterday the railroads unloaded their freight of veterans and their families, until last night the city was jammed and yet only half of the crowd was here. A close estimate of the number of visitors already in the city places it at over 150,000. Nearly all the delegates have arrived. The western delegations of members of the Grand Army far exceed the eastern boys. They come in thousands. So far accomodations seem to have been provided for all on the ground. The arrangements are excellent. Yesterday morning departments from Colorado, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and several southern states arrived. The New England state departments came in a brigade and presented a fine appearance. Worcester post, of Worcester, Mass., is the post sending the largest number of men here, over 400 boys in blue coming from this Bay State city.

JUDGE RHEA.

The feature of the day was the arrival of Gen. Sherman and Commander Rea. Gen. Sherman arrived from his sister's home at Lancaster at noon. A crowd was at the station, and he was given an ovation. An effort was made by some of his old companions to have him speak to them, but this he declined to do at the station, and so was driven to the residence of Charles H. Neil, where he is stopping. The long lines of trains from the west were greatly delayed, and the general council, or that portion of them which gathered at the station to greet the distinguished guest and head of the Grand Army, had a long wait. It was expected that Commander-in-Chief Rea would be in at 10 a. m., and the committee gathered to welcome him. It was 12:30 before the train arrived. Commander Rea was accompanied by his wife, Adjt. Gen. Daniel Fish and wife, and aids-de-camp Cols. Henderson, Patterson and Adair. The distinguished party was taken to the carriages which were awaiting them and taken to the residence of Mrs. Ex-Governor Dennison. Commander Rea and his staff are delighted with the arrangements made and the hospitality that crowds all.

GEN. W. T. SHERMAN.

The Sons of Veterans met and organized here, in session here, gave a reception last night to the Grand Army, ex-President Hayes presiding. It took place at the Hall of the Society of West Virginia.

There were good people at the door to attend the reception. The exercises were of a welcoming character. On behalf of the Sons of Veterans of the United States Mr. Brown, of Jackson, O., welcomed the other organizations in a speech in which he briefly reviewed the growth of the Sons of Veterans until it to-day reaches into thirty-one states and territories and numbers over 70,000 men among its members. Commander-in-Chief Rea responded.

THE BIG VIRGINIA ARMY TENT.

Ex-President Hayes was one of the orators of the evening and spoke of the sinews of war which the members of this organization represent. Gen. Gibson and others also spoke. Excellent vocal music was furnished by a male chorus of 200 voices. As an encore to the first piece, the club sang "Marching Through Georgia," the entire audience joining in the chorus with a roar that shook the tent and roused all sleepers.

The candidates for the various positions of honor in the national encampment will, from present indications, be quite numerous. Some are openly in the field, others are only being mentioned by their friends, and a number, it is said, are yet to be announced. Those whose names are mentioned for commander-in-chief are Judge Veasey, of Vermont; Gen. John Palmer, of New York; Gen. William Warner, of Missouri; Hon. John C. Linehan, of New Hampshire; Gen. N. M. Curtiss, of New York; Governor Alger, of Michigan; Col. Sexton, of Illinois, and Gen. Gobbin, of Pennsylvania. New York, having two names for the chief office, will decide to whom they will give their support, so that they will not lose their strength by going into the session divided. It is probable that the vote of the state will be cast solid for either Gen. Curtiss or Gen. Palmer. From what can be learned from the delegates, it looks as if Mr. Warner, of Missouri, has the largest following, but it is said by some that he will not accept.

N. M. CURTIS.

Last night the Grand Army men who are here held informal camp fires at the tenting grounds and passed the time with story-telling and such social enjoyment as characterize reunions of old soldiers. Parts of nearly all the delegations are on the ground. As a rule they do not come together, and with the exception of California, no entire state delegation is here yet.

HOW THREAD IS NUMBERED.

What Changes Have Been Introduced with the Sewing Machine.

Everybody knows the sizes of thread. Every seamstress knows whether she wants No. 30 or 60 or 150, and knows, when she hears the number, about what is the size of the strand referred to; but how the numbers happen to be what they are, and just what they mean, not one person in a thousand knows.

And yet it is a simple matter to explain, was the information accorded to a reporter by an employee of one of the largest spool cotton manufactories in the United States.

When 840 yards of yarn weigh 7,000 grains, a pound of cotton, the yarn is No. 1. If 1680 yards weigh a pound, it will be No. 2 yarn. For No. 50 yarn it would take 50 multiplied by 840 yards to weigh a pound. This is the whole of the yarn measurement.

The early manufactured thread was three-cord, and the thread took its number from the number of the yarn from which it was made. No. 60 yarn made No. 60 thread, though in point of fact the actual calibre of No. 60 thread would equal No. 20 yarn, being three 60 strands.

When the sewing machine came into the market as the great consumer, unreasoning in its work and inexorable in its demands for mechanical accuracy, six-cord cotton had to be made as a smoother product.

As thread numbers were already established, they were not altered for the new article, and No. 60 six-cord and No. 60 three-cord are identical in size as well as in number. To effect this the six-cord has to be made of yarn twice as firm as that demanded by the three-cord.

The No. 60 six-cord would be six strands of No. 120 yarn. Three-cord spool cotton is the same number as the yarn it is made of. Six-cord spool cotton is made of yarn that is double its number.

As simple a thing as thread is there are 2,000 different kinds made.—New York Mail and Express.

HIS GOOD EXCUSE.

The Boy Had the Making of a Great Lawyer in Him.

Mrs. Smith was sitting in the kitchen the other evening when a low sad wail fell upon her ear. At the same time there came a timid knock at the front door. Opening it suddenly a pitiable sight met her gaze.

There stood little Johnny, his breast heaving with suppressed sobs, and covered with mud from head to foot. Indeed, it was hard to tell which was Johnny and which was mud.

Mrs. Smith gazed at him for a moment in speechless rage, then catching him by the arm she dragged him into the house.

"Noo, ye wee wretch," she cried, "answer me truly—Whaur in the worl' hae ye been, an' whit hae ye been daein'?"

"Boo-hoo," sobbed Johnny, in terror. "I hivna been daein' anything. I jist fell doon in the glaur."

"Fell doon in the glaur!" repeated his mother. "Ma certie, wait till yer faither comes hame, an ye'll see whit ye'll get for fa'in' doon in the glaur. Whit dae ye mean by it? An' yer new knicker-bockers, too, clean spiled!"

"Boo-hoo," cried Johnny, in despair. "I hadna time ter tak' them off when I felt masel' fa'in."

HAY FEVER.

I have suffered greatly from periodical returns of hay fever. Covert & Cheever, Druggists, suggested Ely's Cream Balm. I used it during a severe attack. "He was all out of them."

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 2, 1885.

The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:

Gentlemen—I can cheerfully and truthfully say that S. S. S. is the greatest blood purifier on earth. In 1884 I contracted blood poison. Physicians treated me with no good results. I took a half dozen different kinds of blood mixtures, but, without receiving any permanent relief! I was induced to try S. S. S. I began the first bottle with the gravest doubts of success. I had been so often deceived. But improvement came, and I continued its use until perfectly well. I have since married, and have a healthy family. No trace of the disease is seen. Swift's Specific did all this for me, and I am grateful. Yours truly, J. S. CHAPPER, 1.3 Dave Ave.

Arrested for Arson.

HOWELL, Mich., Sept. 1.—Mrs. M. H. Dubois, of Oak Grove, charged with setting fire to her home, and suspected of attempting to get rid of her husband, was examined Friday, but owing to faulty information she was discharged. The next morning she was rearrested, and her husband with her. A preliminary examination revealed a well-laid plot to burn the property for the insurance, and the accused was held for trial, the woman's bail being placed at $1,000 and her husband's at $300.

Excitement in Texas.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkble recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds.

LOG CABINS are fast going out of style as fashionable residences, log cabins will, however always have a place in American history, as they were the most prominent features of our country's early social life. The pioneers were strong, rugged, healthy. Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy is a reproduction of one of the best of the old time tools and herb Remedies, which kept them well. Everybody praises "Tippecanoe" as a stomach tonic.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Dry, dry, yes, the weather at Britton is dry. But it is not news, the farmers have known it for several weeks but we record the fact out of sympathy and pray for rain.

In spite of dry weather wheat is being sown and this is well. Let man do his part in proper season and manner and leave the rest to divine Providence.

Rev. E W Borden, who has been supplying the congregational pulpit at Sylvania, Ohio, has completed his year there and will now spend his Sabbaths at home.

Last Monday was a high day in Britton, democrats and republicans vieing with each other in spreading their colors to the breeze. The enterprising editor of the Tecumseh Herald was on hand to gather all items of interest. He is a democrat as we generally suppose, but he is so honest and fair that all parties support his valuable paper and we may look for an impartial report of the meeting here on Monday last. The village was crowded with men women and children, but I saw no one drunk nor did I hear anything which savoured of a quarrel. A more respectable crowd don't scarcely be gathered than was here to hear a political discussion in straightforward argument.

Farmers are busy wheat seeding, cutting corn and threshing but found time to attend the Stearns—Allen contest at Britton Monday in pulling wool of the people. MRS. CLEVELAND'S SOCIAL DUTIES.

The Labors and Responsibilities of the President's Wife.

Mrs. Cleveland's social duties are greater than is generally supposed. She assists the President at his state receptions, and sits opposite him at state dinners. She is considered the social head of the Administration, and she is, indeed, the mistress of the White House.

The gorgeous floral decorations of the state reception rooms are subject to her approval and she stands with the President whenever he receives his guests in a social way.

The state dinners of the President are perhaps the grandest social affairs of the American court, and to be invited to the White House to one of these is the social event of a lifetime.

The White House blazes with light. The Marine Band plays in the vestibule. The great East Room becomes a tropical flower garden, and its white and silver pillars are wreathed with garlands and hung with flower shields, upon which have been woven American eagles of pinks and roses.

It is here that Mrs Cleveland stands with the President and receives the thirty or fifty guests who have been invited to the dinner, and it is from here that she is escorted to the state dining room by the most honored of the party.

The dining room sparkles with cut glass and silver, and the dinner of many courses is gotten up by French cooks. The dainties of viands are washed down with rare old wines, and a number of glasses stand by each plate save that of Mrs. Cleveland.

The President's wife has, as far as her own example goes, espoused the cause of temperance. She drinks nothing at these dinners but Apollinaris water, and, though she does not, as did Mrs Hayes, endeavor to regulate the tastes of others, she does not touch wine herself.

At her state receptions she shakes hands with from three to five thousand persons on every such night during the season. It is said that she has shaken hands with more than one hundred thousand people during the past winter.

She is a good hand shaker and each caller receives a warm grasp and a decided pressure. In most cases this is accompanied by a cordial smile, and those who have the pleasure of chatting with Mrs. Cleveland for a short time become her friends.—Cosmopolitan.

The Newspaper Revolution.

"The era of cumbrous blanket-sheets seems coming to an end, and newspapers like the New York Sun and "THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS are the prominent journalistic successes of the period. The papers that give enough reading matter to fill a good volume in each daily issue are going out of favor with many people who have some other employment for their time than the search through mountains of straw for kernels of news. The sheets that give the news systematically and amply, and without unnecessary padding, are taking the lead in the great cities."

Forty years ago the chief duty of an editor, in view of his limited facilities, was to gather all the news he could and print it. Intelligence was transmitted slowly; many occurrences of interest were never heard of beyond their immediate locality; ocean-mails were long in transit, and the overthrow of an European dynasty was not known here until long after the event. Suddenly there came a change. The railroad and the telegraph superseded old methods, and the newspaper was literally flooded with news. The death of a petty ward politician in San Francisco, the result of a Presidential election, the accession of a sovereign, the outbreak of a war, and notice that a shanty had been burden in Texas, all were hurried over the wires into the newspaper offices, and there being no idea of discrimination, all were printed. Thus originated the "blanket sheet." The publisher who could send out the biggest blanket for a nickel was the most enterprising; the biggest paper was the best; it was a period of bigness. But after a time the very excess of the evil brought the remedy, and there began an era of discrimination, during which arose such journals as the New York Sun and THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. That the public appreciated the new departure is best evidenced in the fact that the Sun reached a circulation of 150,000 a day, and THE DAILY NEWS 175,000. The wonderful and constantly growing popularity of the condensed, low-priced papers has so far brought the cumbrous and high-priced blanket-sheets to their senses, that they have now somewhat reformed both as to size and price, but they are still too far removed from the true ideal of American journalism to meet the needs of the great majority.

ALL THE NEWS FOR ONE CENT WITH THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

In the west THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS has been the first to appreciate and meet the situation, and it now enjoys the results of its twelve years of pioneer work in a daily circulation averaging over three times that of any of its contemporaries, and considerably more than the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. It is hardly necessary to say that such a circulation could not be attained, much less maintained, except by a paper of high grade of excellence, as well as one sold at a popular price. To win such recognition the cheap paper must be as good a newspaper as the best of its higher-priced competitors. And this THE DAILY NEWS certainly is. It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only paper in Chicago which possesses a franchise which secures to it both the day and night dispatches of the Association. In the general field of news-gathering it represents in the highest degree the progressive enterprise of American journalism: as a news-paper it challenges comparison with any in the land. In its editorial columns THE DAILY NEWS speaks from the standpoint of the independent newspaper, and thereby escapes the temptation of impairing honest and honorable influence by condoning or defending the questionable under the pressure of party allegiance. It is not an organ, neither is it a neutral in questions of principle. It has the courage of its convictions. The organ of no party, sect or interest, it voices the united demand of all those better elements of society in behalf of purity, honesty and decency in all the relations of life. By just so much as it thus commends itself to the regard of the truly "best people" of the community does it voluntarily renounce any community of interest with all others.

So conspicuous a success must have its imitators, and THE DAILY NEWS has the endorsement such imitation always bestows. However as it is the only one-cent paper in Chicago or the West which is a member of the Associated Press—all other Chicago Associated Press papers cost 3 cents—all imitation must continue, so far as news giving value is concerned, to be but imitation. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is "the original," "the best."

Sold by all newsdealers at ONE CENT per copy, six cents per week. Mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. Every farmer can now have his daily paper at little more than the cost of the old time weekly. Address

FRANKLIN FACTS.

We are happy to state that uncle William Whelan, whose life has been dispaired of, is now thought to be out of danger; considering his age and the very serious nature of his injuries, it seems almost miraculous. Aunt Emily, whose injuries were less severe, or at least followed by less serious complications, is able to be up and around. Their daughter, Mrs. Wm. Wisner, who was taken sick while nursing them is also better. Mrs. Fisk Beebe another daughter is still on the sick list.

Mrs. James Allen whose health has been so poor for some time was much worse last week. Sunday she was feeling some better and was able to sit up a little. Her little daughter, Inez, is also sick.

Uncle Perry Allen is quite feeble.

James Eddy was married something like two weeks ago in LaGrange, Ind. to Miss Nora Zook.

Ezra Simmons is the owner of a racing sulky which weighs but fifty-three pounds; its cost was more than $2.50 per pound.

Again has Tipton Boy, owned by Otis Whelan, signally distinguished himself; after making best time in the races in Ind., a few weeks since, he now at the State fair at Jackson, so we are told, takes the $300 cash prize.

Mrs. George Swartz and Austen have returned from a few weeks visit among friends and relatives in York State.

The blessed rain of Saturday night and Sunday shows that mother Nature has not forgotten how its done after all. People will now sow their wheat with a better feeling.

Our hay fever friends are still at Mackinac Island, probably not even thinking of winging their flight homeward, at least not soon. Under date of Aug. 29, Mrs. Ed. Wisner writes: "It is said there are only about one half as many people on the Island as in former years at this time, owing it is said to the coolness of the season. I wish you could be here to take a walk with me and see the big hotel and the cottges dotted here and there all over the island; there has been a great change since I was here two years ago," and then she adds as an after thought, "but I can not say that I like it any better."

At the meeting of the society at S. N. Munger's Sept. 29th, will occur the annual election of officers. Members please turn out en masse.

Last Friday morning, about four o'clock, fire broke out in the east end of Beasley's blk., and before it ceased, swept clean all that stood east of the Harness shop. Beasley had three store rooms burned. One was the Post Office, Laban Babcock, P. M. Tittsworth had a grocery store, Beasley a furniture store and Miss LeFever a millinery and fancy shop in the Beasley building. H. C. Rauch, druggist and grocer, occupied a building owned by Joseph Exelby at the west end of the row that was burned. Mr. Gillen and family occupied rooms over the stores in Beasley's block and H. C. Rauch and family occupied rooms over his store. So rapid was the progress of the fire that nothing of consequence was saved. Gillen and family barely escaped with their lives. All their household goods and most of their clothing was burned. The losses are mostly covered by insurance. Mr. Gillen suffers the loss of all he had and has no insurance, and what makes it seem the more trying for him, he was expecting to remove in a day or two, into a new house lately built by I. S. Osborne. This is a severe blow on Britton, but we hope in due time to recover.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, SEP. 20

The Republican organs are hard to please. They have the President's letter of acceptance at last, and still they are not satisfied.

Here is the latest conundrum: "Why is it that a reduction of tariff taxes from 47 to 40 per cent is free trade, while a reduction of the whisky tax to zero is not free whisky?"

The big Democratic meeting to be held in Detroit next Wednesday, Sept. 26th, will be addressed by Don M. Dickinson, Ex Senator McDonald of Indiana (on Black and tan), Wea ver. It will be a rousing demonstration.

If James G. Blaine cannot hold his own State up to the majority of four years ago after the hottest canvass ever made in Maine, how do the Republicans expect to carry the doubtful States which went for Cleveland in 1884?

We believe that the same means which are adopted to relieve the treasury of its present surplus and prevent its recurrence should cheapen to our people the cost of supplying their daily wants. Both of these objects we seek in part to regain by reducing the present tariff rate upon the necessaries of life.—Cleveland's Letter of Acceptance.

We are annually collecting at our custom houses and by means of our internal revenue system many millions in excess of all legitimate public needs. As a consequence there now remains in the National Treasury a surplus of more than one hundred and thirty million dollars. No better evidence could be furnished that the people are exorbitantly taxed.—Cleveland's Letter.

"Constitutionally, a tax can have no other basis than the raising of revenue for public purposes, and whatever governmental exaction has not this basis is tyrannical and unlawful. A tax on imports, therefore, the purpose of which is not to raise revenue but to discourage and indirectly prohibit some particular import for the benefit of some home manufacturer, may well be questioned as being merely colorable, and therefore not warranted by constitutional principles.

Are these the words of some unregenerated Confederate Brigadier? No. They are taken from Judge Cooley's great work on "Constitutional Limitations."

Ingersoll has concluded to follow Blaine and try the Burchard business on his own hook. At an address which he delivered at Saratoga, N. Y., last Wednesday evening, he came out in favor of free tobacco and free whisky also. He repeated there what he had more than once said before that if the Mississippi ran between banks of loaf sugar over a mint bottom, and tumblers grew on bushes there would be no more drunkenness than there is now. There is great excitement among the Republican managers over Ingersoll's flat-footed opinions. With Blaine expounding in favor of the trusts and Bob Ingersoll sounding the praises of free whisky the outlook is not pleasant. After the meeting one of the Republican lights rushed into another's confidence and exclaimed: "Can't we stop this? Why doesn't the state committee call this man home?" This man is good. This man (Ingersoll.) That man (Harrison.) The campaign is progressing. On with the dance. Let joy be unconfined, and whisky, too!—N. Y. Evening Post.

It is a well-known fact that nearly all the big millionaires of this country—the Croesuses—those who rate at $10,000,000—have accumulated their gold by questionable methods. Many of them have been notoriously dishonest in their transactions; many have robbed the people either directly or indirectly. These money kings are monopolists. They are also Republicans. They could not belong to any other party. And each one of these millionaire monopolists will be assessed heavily to carry on the Republican canvass. From his standpoint, he can afford to pay liberally. High protection is money in the pocket of monopolists. The wage-worker gets no better wages, but he is allowed the privilege of paying higher for the necessaries of life. This simple proposition was not understood a few years ago. The specious high tariff doctrine caught the masses. But the people are beginning to understand it now.

AND STILL THEY COME.

A review of the tariff opinions of the manufacturers of Watertown shows that the sentiment of that thriving and busy little city is strongly in favor of the democratic policy of tariff reform. Levi H. Brown, president of the Watertown Spring Wagon Company, declares that the Mills bill, so far from hurting the business of his concern, will greatly help it by reducing the prices of materials for which extravagant prices are now paid.—James H. Slade, the manager of the Eames Vacuum Brake Company, explains that our advantage over Europe lies in the superior energy and intelligence of our workmen, and that an opportunity to compete more freely would necessarily benefit both capital and labor. S. F. Bagg, secretary of the Watertown Steam Engine Company, is another manufacturer who has declined the invitation to submit to the fat-frying process, and says the tariff revision can neither hurt the interests of his concern nor those of his workmen. Mr. Geo. C. Sherman, of the Taggart Paper Co., expresses his opinion after this fashion: "If we could get raw materials such as we use free of duty, our business would increase and our employees be benefitted and I believe they know enough not to be fooled by the silly talk about 'free trade.'" Republican manufacturers like Mr. George C. Knowlton, of the Watertown Paper Company, and Mr. C. R. Remington, who are engaged in similar business to Mr. Sherman, coincide with that gentleman in his views respecting tariff revision. Many interesting details confirmatory of these statements are given by the Watertown correspondent of the New York Times.

Among the recent Orange converts to the cause of Cleveland and Thurman and tariff reform is Charles F. Werner, a prominent business man and one of the leading German republicans in that city. Three years ago he was a candidate for Alderman on the republican ticket in the 1st ward, but was defeated by Edward H. Snyder. The change in his political opinion is not, however, due to any soreheadedness over that defeat, because he did not seek the nomination and his failure to be elected gave him no concern.

Another conversion to democracy is that of George J. Ferry, one of the largest hat manufacturers in this country. Although for the past eight years Mr. Ferry has been prominent as a republican with a prohibition tendency, he has determined to cast his vote this year for Cleveland and tariff reform.

James Emerson, a well-known Prohibitionist of Orange, and Stephen Lyons, an Orange Valley republican, will also cast their votes for Cleveland.

An interesting conversion is that of Eugene Baldwin, a hatter in the employ of E. V. Connet & Co. at Orange Valley. The majority of Connett's employees are democrats and for some time past a lively discussion has taken place daily between the republican hatter and his democratic co workers. The democrats at length established the value of their opinions on the tariff question to Baldwin's satisfaction, and yesterday he declared himself a voter for Cleveland and headed a procession up and down the finishing room, bearing a banner on which was displayed the names of the democratic presidential nominees.

The Ann Arbor Argus vouches for these two cases:

Thomas Blake, a well-known farmer of Ann Arbor township, has always hitherto acted with the republican party. He visited England this spring and while there purchased a pair of woolen blankets, paying $9.25 for them. When he came home the custom house officers required him to pay $6.75 duty upon them. This made the blankets cost him $16. He showed his purchase to his wife, who produced a pair of blankets she had just bought here, of just half the size of the imported blankets, for which she had paid $8. This would make the same size blankets as those brought home by Mr. Blake cost $16 for two pair. Mrs. Blake's blankets were of the finer quality. Mr. Blake made up his mind that if it cost him $6.75 tax upon two pair of woolen blankets, under the present law, he wanted that tax reduced. Hence he has declared for Cleveland and revenue reform.

Albert Blaess, one of Washtenaw's most prosperous farmers, who has a fine farm on Lodi Plains and several hundred sheep, has openly declared for Cleveland and Thurman. Mr. B. has been an active and outspoken republican. But he has had his eyes opened to the fact that the farmers of this country are too heavily taxed through the tariff, and as the democrats propose to reduce that tax he has joined them, and a Cleveland and Thurman pole will be erected in front of his house to-day. Mr. Blaess recently revisited Germany. He is a well-informed man and keeps his eyes open. In Germany he saw an American reaper, made in this country and shipped over there, which after all expenses of transportation, sold for something like $40 less than an exactly similar reaper of the same make cost him in this country. Mr. Blaess thinks the republicans can talk sheep to him all they please, and he owns as many if not more sheep than any of them, but they can't alter the fact that American manufacturers are enabled by the tariff tax to charge the farmers of this country many dollars more for their farm implements than they are willing to sell to the farmers in foreign countries.

HIGH OR LOW TAXES.

Heretofore the republican party by its platform declarations has favored a revision of the tariff. This year it is not a question of degree, it is absolutely no reduction whatever which the party demands. The taxes are now higher than before in 25 years, only twice in the history of tariff were they higher. The receipts from customs dues are three times as much as 25 years ago, yet the republican party says the tariff shall not be reduced. This is the reality which confronts the people. The tariff tax is 47 per cent. of the value of goods. The money comes from somewhere, and as millions of dollars worth of articles upon which a tariff is levied are made in this country, and upon which the tariff is added it is apparent that the people pay, in the aggregate, many times more than is merely represented in the treasury receipts. The receipts, however, amount to $217,000,000 a year, at least $100,000,000 more than the government can use even upon the basis of lavish expenditure. This excess belongs to the people. It belongs to business. It should be in circulation every day. Its purchasing capacity in trade amounts to many hundreds of millions of dollars. To keep it from the people is an oppressive act of the government, and the responsibility for the collection and retention of the surplus must rest with the party which declares that taxes shall not be reduced. This is a plain business proposition. The issue is all important. It is one of taxation. President Cleveland has declared for tax reform. His party in convention has declared for tax reform. His party in congress is endeavoring to pass a measure in the line of tax reform. The Opposition is opposite in all of these particulars. The republican candidate, platform and congressmen oppose reduction. This campaign will decide this mighty question, and the people should approach the election with convictions grounded upon the most thorough thought and investigation. Strip the question of glamour and horror. Leave out the preference of men, consider only the issue. Taxation is the issue. How do you stand? Highwater or low?—Toledo Bee.

INFORMATION ON THE ROAD.

The Toledo Bee is responsible for the following:

Mr. James Bartlett, of this city, representing the Isaac D. Smead furnace and ventilating interests, has occasion to travel very extensively, and consequently his opportunities for observation are the very best. The last time out he drifted against some political sentiment which is interesting and significant. In a sleeping car two gentlemen were engaged in conversation. One was a timber operator from Bay City, Mich. He was loud in praise of the protective tariff, attributed the development of the business to this cause and extolled the policy which insured an adequate remuneration for honest labor. When he had rolled off his protective argument to his evident satisfaction the other gentleman quietly replied:

"You didn't pay as high wages three years ago as you did the previous season, did you?"

"Well I hardly remember, possibly not quite as much."

"And two years ago there was another drop, and one—"

"Oh, that was on account of a depression of the trade."

"And this year the wages are not as high as last year, are they?"

"That is—you see—trade is not quite—well, times are not so brisk, you know."

"Stop, my friend; is it not a fact that every year you bring gangs of Canadian laborers over to your forests and pay them about what you please for labor, regardless of the tariff, and aren't you cutting the wages whenever you can? Answer me truthfully, now, before you talk any more about the tariff which makes you rich at the expense of your customers."

The timber baron had caught a tartar and he moved toward the other end of the car to collect his senses in puffs of smoke from an imported cigar.

Meeting an eastern manufacturer of woolen goods, conversation naturally turned upon the tariff, and the manufacturer gave his ideas in the following interesting manner:

"It is singular that the people allow themselves to become befuddled on this wool question. Free wool cannot reduce the price of American wool, because the imported wools do not enter into competition with the domestic product. Every candid manufacturer of woolens will tell you that in most of our mills there must be an admixture; that is, in order to secure the best results we need both foreign and home wools. Now, if we could obtain foreign wool without paying a duty we could sell our wares in foreign markets at prices which would enable us to double our sales. And don't you see that as we must have home wools to mix with the foreign fleece, the demand for American wools would increase. This increase would stimulate the industry here at home and prices would advance instead of decrease. This is the logic of the wool question, and when anybody says differently, he either is ignorant or purposely deceives in the interest of politics. If everybody would understand that both domestic and foreign wools must be used in manufacture they would realize how important it is to encourage the traffic in both."

"This kind of talk," said Mr. Bartlett, "is of the knock out kind, and convinces those who are open to conviction."

TAKING OLD ABE'S ADVICE.

JAMES G. BLAINE—"Now, Uncle Samuel, you better trade horses. This beast has been fed at the Home Protection crib, and can carry you safely over."

UNCLE SAM—"Wall, I reckon not. We've got purty nicely started on tariff reform now, and I'll just take old Abe's advice, and not be a swappin' hosses while crossing a stream."

I have been afflicted with hay fever from early in August until frost. My eyes would run a stream of water and I sneezed continually. I was advised to use Ely's Cream Balm. It has worked like a charm and I can say I am entirely cured.—Mrs. Emeline Johnson, Chester, Conn.

I have been for several years a sufferer from hay fever and severe head colds. I have found nothing that can compare with Ely's Cream Balm. I would not be without it for any consideration. It is simply wonderful in its effect upon the nasal organs.—S. A. Burtt, Wilmington, N. C.

Our people ask relief from the undue and unnecessary burden of tariff taxation now resting upon them. They are offered—free tobacco and free whiskey. They ask for bread and they are given a stone.—President Cleveland's Letter.

In connection with the fact that Dr Jones' Red Clover Tonic has had the largest sale, it has been the most successful remedy ever before the public for all blood troubles and diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Fifty cents buys a bottle of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. Mrs. Emma Brown, Lima, Ohio, says four bottles of Jones' Red Clover Tonic has cured me of sick headache that I have been subject to for over nine years.

A FAVORITE WITH THE FAIR SEX.

Papillon (extract of flax) Skin Cure is superior to all the much-advertised skin beautifiers with the advantage of being beneficial, and not like the mineral preparations usually sold which are very poisonous. It will remove all inflammation, chafing and roughness of the skin, sunburn, freckles and unseemly blotches, and leave the cuticle fair and soft as an infant's. An actual necessity for the complete toilet table. Large bottles only $1.00.

Testing the Eggs.

Johnny, who is four years old, was playing in the yard one day, and a lady who lives close by wished to have the eggs, if any were laid since her last visit to the bennery, brought in. She said to the little boy:

"Johnny, will you go to the bennery and see if there are any eggs there? Don't bring in the china ones; leave them there, but if there be any others bring them in."

Johnny started to do the bidding, and soon returned with two or three broken eggs and his pinafore soiled.

The lady, seeing him coming, exclaimed:

Johnny looked at her in surprise, and said:

"How could I tell whether they were china eggs or not, if I didn't try them?"

GRAPE CURE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. Speer, of New Jersey, whose wines have such a well merited and extended reputation all over this country and Europe, for their age and excellent properties in cases of sickness, are so famous for their curative properties, is about to build a large Hotel or Grape Cure Establishment on one corner of his vineyard. The House will accommodate five or six hundred guests who are to have the privilege of roaming among the vines, in the morning to pluck the ripe grapes and Breakfast on them while the cool dew is yet on.

Filial Imitation.

Mamma—"Harry, you must be still! No respectable person will stamp and pound and shout the way you are doing."

Harry (doubly aggrieved)—"Why, mamma, I was only just imitating the way papa preaches."—Burlington Free Press.

Some Foolish People

Allow a cough to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, Oh, it will wear away, but in most cases it wears them away. THE DOG AND THE SHADOW

A Dog, crossing a bridge over a stream with a piece of flesh in his mouth, saw his own shadow in the water, and took it for that of another Dog, with a piece of meat double his own in size. He therefore let go his own, and fiercely attacked the other Dog, to get his larger piece from him. He thus lost both.—Æsop's Fables.

LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE IN FULL.

Protective Tariff Indorsed—What He Would Do With the Surplus—The Immigration Question Discussed—A Word on the Subject of a Fair Count—Opposed to Trusts—Civil Service Reform Favored—Our Foreign Relations.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 12.—Gen. Harrison's letter of acceptance was given to the press last night. It is addressed to the Hon. M. M. Estee and others, committee, etc., and is given in full below:

GENTLEMEN: When your committee visited me on the Fourth of July last and presented the official announcement of my nomination for the presidency of the United States by the Republican convention, I promised as soon as practicable to communicate to you a more formal acceptance of the nomination. Since that time the work of receiving and addressing, almost daily, large delegations of my fellow-citizens has not only occupied all of my time, but has in some measure rendered it unnecessary for me to use this letter as a medium of communicating to the public my views on the questions involved in this campaign. I appreciate very highly the confidence and respect manifested by the convention, and accept the nomination with a feeling of gratitude and a full sense of the responsibilities which accompany it.

It is a matter of congratulation that the declarations of the Chicago convention upon the questions that now attract the interest of our people are so clear and emphatic. There is further cause of congratulation in the fact that the convention utterances of the Democratic party, if in any degree uncertain or contradictory, can now be judged and interpreted by executive acts and messages and by definite propositions in legislation.

This is especially true of what is popularly known as the tariff question. The issue can not now be obscured. It is not a contest between schedules, but between wide apart principles. The foreign competitors for our market have, with quick instinct, seen how one issue of this contest may bring them advantages, and our own people are not so dull as to miss or neglect the grave interests that are involved for them. The assault upon our protective system is open and defiant. Protection is assailed as unconstitutional in law, or as vicious in principle, and those who hold such views sincerely can not stop short of an absolute elimination from our tariff laws of the principle of protection. The Mills bill is only a step, but it is toward an object that the leaders of Democratic thought and legislation have clearly in mind. The important question is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it. Judged by the executive message of December last, by the Mills bill, by the debates in congress, and by the St. Louis platform, the Democratic party will, if supported by the country, place the tariff laws upon a purely revenue basis. This is practical free trade—free trade in the English sense. The legend upon the banner may not be "Free Trade"—it may be the more obscure motto "Tariff Reform;" but neither the banner nor the inscription is conclusive, or, indeed, very important. The assault itself is the important fact.

Those who teach that the import duty upon foreign goods sold in our market is paid by the consumer, and that the price of the domestic competing article is enhanced to the amount of the duty on the imported article; that every million dollars collected for customs duties represents many millions more which do not reach the treasury but are paid by our citizens as the increased cost of domestic productions resulting from the tariff laws, may not intend to discredit in the minds of others our system of levying duties on competing foreign products; but it is clearly already discredited in their own. We can not doubt, without impugning their integrity, that if free to act upon their convictions they would so revise our laws as to lay the burden of the customs revenue upon articles that are not produced in this country, and to place upon the free list all competing foreign products.

I do not stop to refute this theory as to the effect of our tariff duties. Those who advance it are students of maxims and not of the markets. They may be safely allowed to call their project "tariff reform," if the people understand that in the end the argument compels free trade in all competing products. This end may not be reached abruptly, and its approach may be accompanied with some expressions of sympathy for our protected industries and our working people; but it will certainly come if these early steps do not arouse the people to effective resistance.

The Republican party holds that a protective tariff is constitutional, wholesome and necessary. We do not offer a fixed schedule, but a principle. We will revise the schedule, modify rates, but always with intelligent prevision as to the effect upon domestic production and the wages of our working people. We believe it to be one of the worthy objects of tariff legislation to preserve the American market for American producers, and to maintain the American scale of wages by adequate discriminating duties upon foreign competing products. The effect of lower rates and larger importations upon the public revenue is contingent and doubtful, but not so the effect upon American production and American wages. Less work and lower wages must be accepted as the inevitable result of the increased offering of foreign goods in our market.

By way of recompense for this reduction in the wages and the loss of the American market, it is suggested that the diminished wages of the workingman will have an undiminished purchasing power, and that he will be able to make up for the loss of the home market by an enlarged foreign market. Our workingmen have the settlement of the question in their own hands. They now obtain higher wages and live more comfortably than those of any other country. They will make choice between the substantial advantages they have in hand and the deceptive promises and forecasts of these theorizing reformers. They will decide for themselves and for the country whether the protective system shall be continued or destroyed.

The fact of a treasury surplus, the amount of which is variously stated, has directed public attention to a consideration of the methods by which the national income may best be reduced to the level of a wise and economical expenditure. This condition has been seized upon by those who are hostile to protective customs duties as an advantageous base for attack upon our tariff laws. They have magnified and nursed the surplus, which they affect to depreciate, seemingly for the purposes of exaggerating the evil in order to reconcile the people to the extreme remedy they propose. A proper reduction of the revenues does not necessitate, and should not suggest, the abandonment or impairment of the protective system. The methods suggested by our convention will not need to be exhausted in order to effect the necessary reduction. We are not likely to be called upon, I think, to make a present choice between the surrender of the protective system and the entire repeal of the internal taxes. Such a contingency, in view of the present relation of expenditures to revenue, is remote. The inspection and regulation of the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is important, and the revenue derived from it is not so great that the repeal of the law need enter into any plan of revenue reduction. The surplus now in the treasury should be used in the purchase of bonds. The law authorizes this use of it, and if it is not needed for current or deficiency appropriations, the people, and not the banks in which it has been deposited, should have the advantage of its use by stopping interest upon the public debt. At least those who needlessly hoard it should not be allowed to use the fear of a monetary stringency thus produced, to coerce public sentiment upon other questions.

Closely connected with the subject of the tariff is that of the importation of foreign laborers under contracts of service to be performed here. The law now in force prohibiting such contracts received my cordial support in the senate, and such amendments as may be found necessary effectively to deliver our workingmen and women from this most inequitable form of competition will have my sincere advocacy. Legislation prohibiting the importation of laborers under contracts to serve here will, however, afford very inadequate relief to our working people if the system of protective duties is broken down. If the products of American shops must compete in the American market, without favoring duties, with the products of cheap foreign labor the effect will be different, if at all, only in degree, whether the cheap laborer is across the street or over the sea. Such competition will soon reduce wages here to the level of those abroad, and when that condition is reached we will not need any laws forbidding the importation of laborers under contract; they will have no inducement to come, and the employer no inducement to send for them. In the earlier years of our history public agencies to promote immigration were common. The pioneer wanted a neighbor with more friendly instincts than the Indian. Labor was scarce and fully employed. But the day of the immigration bureau has gone by. While our doors will continue open to proper immigrants, we do not need to issue special invitations to the inhabitants of other countries to come to our shores or to share our citizenship. Indeed, the necessity of some inspection and limitation is obvious. We should resolutely refuse to permit foreign governments to send their paupers and criminals to our ports.

We are also clearly under a duty to defend our civilization by excluding alien races whose ultimate assimilation with our people is neither possible nor desirable. The family has been the nucleus of our best immigration and the home the most potent assimilation force in our civilization. The objections to Chinese immigration are distinctive and conclusive, and are now so generally accepted as such that the question has passed entirely beyond the stage of argument. The laws relating to this subject would, should I be charged with their enforcement, be faithfully executed. Such amendments or further legislation as may be necessary and proper to prevent evasions of the laws and to stop further Chinese immigration would also meet my approval. The expression of the convention upon this subject is in entire harmony with my views.

Our civil compact is a government by majorities; and the law loses its sanction and the magistrate our respect when this compact is broken. The evil results of election frauds do not expend themselves upon the voters who are robbed of their rightful influence in public affairs. The individual, or community, or party, that practices or connives at election frauds, has suffered irreparable injury, and will sooner or later realize that to exchange the American system of majority rule for minority control is not only unlawful and unpatriotic, but very unsafe for those who promote it. The disfranchisement of a single legal elector by fraud or intimidation is a crime too grave to be regarded lightly. The right of every qualified elector to cast one free ballot and to have it honestly counted must not be questioned. Every constitutional power should be used to make this right secure and to punish frauds upon the ballot. Our colored people do not ask special legislation in their interest, but only to be made secure in the common rights of American citizenship. They will, however, naturally mistrust the sincerity of those party leaders who appeal to their race for support only in those localities where the suffrage is free and election results doubtful, and compass their disfranchisement where their votes would be controlling and their choice can not be coerced.

The nation, not less than the states, is dependent for prosperity and security upon the intelligence and morality of the people. This common interest very early suggested national aid in the establishment and endowment of schools and colleges in the new states. There is, I believe, a present exigency that calls for still more liberal and direct appropriations in aid of common school education in the states.

The territorial form of government is a temporary expedient, not a permanent civil condition. It is adapted to the exigency that suggested it, but becomes inadequate—and even oppressive—when applied to fixed and populous communities. Several territories are well able to bear the burdens and discharge the duties of free commonwealths in the American union. To exclude them is to deny the just rights of their people, and may well excite their indignant protest. No question of the political preference of the people of a territory should close against them the hospitable door which has opened to two-thirds of the existing states. But admission should be resolutely refused to any territory, a majority of whose people cherish institutions that are repugnant to our civilization or inconsistent with a republican form of government.

The declaration of the convention against "all combinations of capital, organized in trusts or otherwise, to control arbitrarily the condition of trade among our citizens," is in harmony with the views entertained and expressed by me long before the assembling of the convention. Ordinarily, capital shares the losses of idleness with labor; but under the operation of the trust, in some of its forms, the wage worker alone suffers loss, while idle capital receives its dividends from a trust fund. Producers who refuse to join the combination are destroyed and competition as an element of prices is eliminated. It can not be doubted that the legislative authority should and will find a method of dealing fairly and effectively with these and other abuses connected with this subject.

It can hardly be necessary for me to say that I am heartily in sympathy with the declaration of the convention upon the subject of pensions to our soldiers and sailors. What they gave and what they suffered I had some opportunity to observe, and, in a small measure, to experience. They gave ungrudgingly; it was not a trade, but an offering. The measure was heaped up, running over. What they achieved only a distant generation can adequately tell. Without attempting to discuss particular propositions, I may add that measures in behalf of the surviving veterans of the war, and of the families of their dead comrades, should be conceived and executed in a spirit of justice and of the most grateful liberality, and that, in the competition for civil appointments honorable military service should have appropriate recognition.

The law regulating appointments to the classified civil service received my support in the senate, in the belief that it opened the way to a much-needed reform. I still think so, and, therefore, cordially approve the clear and forcible expression of the convention upon this subject. The law should have a friendly interpretation and be faithfully and vigorously enforced. All appointments under it should be absolutely free from partisan considerations and influence. Some extensions of the classified list are practicable and desirable, and further legislation extending the reform to other branches of the service to which it is applicable would receive my approval. In appointments to every grade and department, fitness, and not party service, should be the essential and discriminating test, and fidelity and efficiency the only sure tenure of office. Only the interests of the public service should suggest removals from office. I know the practical difficulties attending the attempt to apply the spirit of the civil service rules to all appointments and removals. It will, however, be my sincere purpose, if elected, to advance the reform.

I notice with pleasure that the convention did not omit to express its solicitude for the promotion of virtue and temperance of our people. The Republican party has always been friendly to everything that tended to make the home life of our people free, pure and prosperous, and will in the future be true to its history in this respect.

Our relations with foreign powers should be characterized by friendliness and respect. The right of our people and of our ships to hospitable treatment should be insisted upon with dignity and firmness. Our nation is too great both in material strength and in moral power to indulge in bluster, or to be suspected of timorousness. Vacillation and inconsistency are as incompatible with successful diplomacy as they are with the national dignity. We should especially cultivate and extend our diplomatic and commercial relations with the Central and South American states. Our fisheries should be fostered and protected. The hardships and risks that are the necessary incidents of the business should not be increased by an inhospitable exclusion from the near lying ports. The resources of a firm, dignified, and consistent diplomacy are undoubtedly equal to the prompt and peaceful solution of the difficulties that now exist. Our neighbors will surely not expect in our ports a commercial hospitality they deny to us in theirs.

I can not extend this letter by a special reference to other subjects upon which the convention gave an expression. In respect to them, as well as to those I have noticed, I am in entire agreement with the declarations of the convention. The resolutions relating to the coinage, to the rebuilding of the navy, to coast defences, and to public lands, express conclusions to all of which I gave my support in the senate.

Inviting a calm and thoughtful consideration of these public questions, we submit them to the people. Their intelligent patriotism and the good Providence that made and has kept us a nation will lead them to wise and safe conclusions. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Sensation in a Kokomo, Indiana, Court Room.

DEADLY WORK WITH A REVOLVER.

A Furious Husband Shoots His Wife Probably Fatally, and a Lawyer Slightly. Who Seeks Solitude Through a High Window—Justice Bohan's Nerve—Two Moonshiners Killed.

KOKOMO, Ind., Sept. 18.—A serious and probably fatal shooting affair occurred in the court-room of Justice Bohan yesterday. Isaiah S. Pruitt and wife, together with her attorney, J. C. Blackledge, were there alone with the justice, the attorney attempting to induce Pruitt to compromise the suit which his wife had brought against him to recover the value of furniture which Pruitt was about to carry with him to Richmond, Ind., when without any warning Pruitt drew a revolver and emptied it at the woman and Mr. Blackledge. Two shots struck Mrs. Pruitt, one in the shoulder and one in the middle of her breast, inflicting a wound which may prove fatal. The third bullet struck Blackledge in the left side, but glanced off a rib and lodged under his arm.

The lawyer at once rushed to a window and jumped to the ground, some twenty-two feet, while the old justice grabbed a chair and promptly knocked the would-be murderer down. Pruett is a well-to-do teamster, and by hard work and the aid of a $8,000 pension which he drew last spring, had accumulated considerable property, which he had sold, and bought a farm near Richmond, to which he expected to remove with his grown up children. The fact that his wife refused to sign the deeds for the sale and also his belief that she and the lawyers were trying to cheat him out of his money, was the cause for the shooting.

TWENTY THOUSAND FOR TASCOTT.

Big Reward Offered for the Capture of a Supposed Chicago Murderer.

CHICAGO Sept. 17.—Mrs. Henrietta Snell, widow of the late Amos J. Snell, who was murdered in his residence on Washington boulevard in February last, called on Superintendent of Police Hubbard yesterday and offered a reward of $20,000 for the capture of William B. Tascott, the supposed murderer of her husband. The reward will hold good for sixty days. The original reward of $10,000 expired last May, and was not renewed. Mr. A. J. Stone, son-in-law of Mrs. Snell said yesterday that the reason the reward was allowed to lapse was because the newspapers had intimated that some of Tascott's family were going to furnish important revelations when the reward expired or was withdrawn. Becoming tired of waiting for the promised revelations the relatives of the dead millionaire yesterday offered a new and larger reward.

FIGHT WITH MOONSHINERS.

A Sanguinary Battle Resulting in the Death of Two.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Sept. 18.—Two gentlemen named Guthrie and Butt, residents of Black Springs, Montgomery county, brought in news yesterday morning of a sanguinary conflict between two moonshiners and two deputy United States marshals near the foot of Blackstone mountain, in Clark county, thirty miles from this city, in which both moonshiners were shot to death. Ted Bates and John Gressam were the moonshiners, and they have been prosecuting their illicit business for some time about three miles north of Black Springs. The recent raids of government officials had the effect of breaking up the organized gang, and Bates and Gressam were attempting to get out of the state when tracked from their haunts by deputies.

Divorce Tragedy in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Sept. 18.—At 2:45 yesterday afternoon Henry Thieme attempted to murder his divorced wife and step-daughter at No. 24 Moffat street, and then shot himself, dying instantly. The step-daughter is not hurt, but the wife received a bullet wound in the right temple, and will probably die.

TROUBLE WITH THE BROTHERHOOD.

The Boycott Breaks Out at St. Louis and May Cause a Strike.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18.—The arrival in this city yesterday of the first through Chicago, Burlington & Quincy trains over the Wabash tracks caused a renewal of hostilities between the brotherhood and the former company. The brotherhood engineers employed as hostlers refused to house the "Q" engines, and the Wabash wipers refused to clean them, and as a consequence they were switched to a side track where they now stand covered with mud and grease. The non-brotherhood engineers found difficulty in securing board and lodging, as the brotherhood men declared they would not eat or sleep in the same house with them. The Wabash is bound by contract to house the "Q" engines, and it is feared that an order to the Wabash employes to fulfill the contract will be followed by a strike.

Switchmen's Union in Convention.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18.—The Switchmen's Mutual Aid association met here in national convention yesterday. There are about 500 delegates in attendance, and they they represent every state and large city in the union. The great question before the convention is the federation scheme proposed at the recent meeting of the engineers in St. Louis. The proceedings began with a morning parade. Then the convention assembled in the Olympic theatre, and was addressed by Acting Mayor Allen, ex-Governor Johnson, Grand Master Monaghan (of Chicago), and others. In the afternoon the convention went into executive session, and passed upon the reports submitted by the various officers.

Strike of Switchmen at Ashland, Wis.

ASHLAND, Wis., Sept. 18.—All the switchmen at the yards of the Lake Shore and Wisconsin Central railroads struck yesterday afternoon for an increase of 25 cents a day. Five locomotives were "killed" by the strikers, and eight men supposed to have been concerned in the "killing" have been arrested. All the men were paid off last evening, and an attempt will be made to put new crews to work.

Plumbers' Strike at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 18.—The boss plumbers have a large amount of work on hand this season in piping houses for natural gas. The journeymen fitters demand an advance in wages from $2.50 to $3.50 per day. This being refused, a strike was ordered by the union and about sixty men are now out. An attempt at arbitration failed, as the bosses declare they will pay no more than the present scale.

An Eastern View of It.

The Chinese minister at a leading European court was condoling with an eminent Englishman because his wife had gone to England for the education of their children.

"You must be lonely," said he; "but, of course, you have another wife?"

"Ah, no, that would be quite out of the question," said the Englishman. "My religion and the law of my country both forbid it. My wife would be in a rage if I took a second one, and my government would punish me severely."

The Chinese diplomat was astonished, but presently said:

"You Europeans have now so much intercourse with the Chinese that we may hope you will soon become sufficiently civilized to act as we do."—Argonaut.

Prohibition
Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.
The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, newsy and piquant, bristling with telling points, brief, clear, sprightly, candid, earnest, convincing, fair, dispassionate, full of ringing facts and bright with sterling truths.
It popularizes the burning question of "Prohibition," brings it down to every mind and conscience, marshals its many startling facts in new and surprising forms, clarifies and invigorates its logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whatever it touches. TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 20, 1888

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Southern California has been highly boomed the past year and thousands have come here with high expectations. Some have stayed and invested but have been disappointed because of injudicious investments made under the excitement of the boom and without a proper consideration of the situation. Others came here, stayed a few days, found property, rents, board high, and without investigation went back with unfavorable reports of the country. Others came here, to see what there was to cause all this booming. They looked into the situation of the country, its future prospects and capabilities, the advantages of the climate, etc., and they invested with the expectation of making a home here.

There is no section of the country that will be equally satisfactory to all people; what one considers an advantage another considers a disadvantage; what one likes another dislikes. There is no portion of the country that possesses peculiar advantages but it has some disadvantages, and California is no exception to this rule and after a careful comparison with any or all other portions of the country, I think it will be found far ahead of them all. I shall speak more particularly of San Diego Co., yet the same will apply to all portions of the State in a greater or less degree. During the past winter while the northern and eastern portions of the country were experiencing extreme cold and hardships, we were enjoying delightful spring and fall weather, with no hard or damaging weather. The stores and business places with none or but very little fire and their front doors open. Seldom any fire in the churches or school houses, yet it was desirable for comfort to have a little fire in the dwelling houses for a portion of the day. There was but a very few days that the sun did not shine bright and warm for a portion of the day and children could play out of doors; no snow and no wind.

Our rains are in the winter and planting is begun in January and is continued until into the fall; crops are secured without any fear of the elements as there are no rains to interfere.

While at the north and east they have been suffering from frost and devasting rain, hail and thunder storms, we have had nothing of the kind, and not frost enough to damage vegetation. There is no thunder and lightning with our rains. Again, when they are sweltering in extremely hot and sultry weather day and night, we are enjoying fine cooling breezes, and nights we require a goodly quantity of bed clothing. Our warmest weather is in the morning after the sun comes up and before the breezes rise, which is from 9 to 10 A. M. and though the thermometer may rise to 100° one can work with comfort on the roof of a house, and sunstroke is unknown in this section as the themometer seldom reaches 85° or drops below 65°

Crops of all kinds are sure year after year, and fruit of all kinds bring a sure and large crop every year, and of the finest quality, and no other portion of the country can produce so large a variety of fruits as California can, and of oranges, lemons, olives, raisins and many other varieties no country can compete with her.

We have our discomforts, so has the north and east. We have dust, and plenty of it; they have rain, mud and dust. We have flees and flies; they have flees, flies and mosquitoes. We have a lack of water; they have an overabundance at sometimes and at others are burnt up with the hot sun and drought. With irrigation we are independent of the elements. While they are experiencing heat, cold, frost, rain and drought, we are enjoying an equitable climate and with irrigation vegetation grows the year around. While they are housed in the winter, the ground frozen and covered with snow, and nothing green but the house-plants, we enjoy bright, warm sunshine, green earth and flowers blooming out of doors and vegetation of all kinds growing.

While Florida is looked to as a Winter resort, California is not only equal to it as a winter resort but promises the advantage of being a desirable Summer resort, while as for health resorts no other portion of the country can compare with it. She possesses more medicated springs and waters than any other State. Her climate is more varid and salubrious owing to its sea, valley and mountain localities, and is exempt from most of the "thousand and one ills flesh is heir to;" her hills and mountains are rich in all the minerals found in any other portion of the country, and her soil is capable of producing any crop grown in any country. Her harbor advantages for the accommodation of the commerce of the world are not equaled by any other on the Pacific coast. Water and roads are the only things needed to bring out the resources of the State, but these are fast being supplied, reservoirs, flumes and canals; by the building of rail and wagon roads. There are millions of acres of fine agricultural lands in the State that will be available by the construction of roads and water facilities.

Southern California is only in her infancy of development, and what may be expected of her when fully developed? Eastern capitalists have been attracted this way and after a thorough investigation of its resources and advantages have expended large sums of money in developing its resourses, and though there has been a check in the excitement, the future of Southern California is assured. To northern and eastern people the price of land seems to be high, but after the above considerations, can it be considered high? The prices of land in all sections of the country is governed by its situations, surroundings and advantages. What other section of the country can present so many attractions and advantages?

THE SITUATION IN FLORIDA.

SANFORD, FLA., SEPT. 18, '88.

DEAR HERALD:—Four weeks have passed since I gave the true conditions of Florida regarding Yellow Fever. A change has come over us, from the one case reported at Jacksonville, 477 cases and 85 deaths up to 6 P. M. today have developed. No new cases reported south of Jacksonville. Tampa's report of yesterday said "no yellow fever here." A few cases yet at Manattee and one or two other places near there, but it has about run out in that part of Florida. Sanford, Sorrento, and Orlando, are still free from it, and a general time of health prevails all over central and south Florida.

A strict quarantine is being kept up all over the State, on every railroad, and in every town. A citizen cannot go from one town to a neighboring town unless he has a physician's certificate, otherwise he has to be shut up ten days. A general stagnation in business prevails over the State, more especially in the northern part. At Kissimmee the work on the new rail road goes on just as if nothing unusual had occured in Florida. The 700 acre sugar plantation is the incentive there which gave impetus to the construction of twelve miles of road in order to furnish transportation for 12 car loads of new machinery for the sugar mills, as well as facilities for transporting the sugar when manufactured.

The sugar interest of south Florida is becoming ponderous since the development of the fact that the drainage of 3,000 acres of reclaimed land proves to be the very best of sugar lands in any of the Southern States, not excepting Louisana. The cane matures to perfection as no frost prevails, as Louisana, Mississippi and other more northern States.

The orange crop will be good this year; some oranges are nearly ripe. Heavy winds of the past two days is bad on groves as it sways the tree and thorns the fruit. Now, as I write, the equinox storm is passing at the rate 45 to 50 miles an hour from the S. E.

I saw my dear old Tecumseh friend, I. G. Rawson, last week; found him in the enjoyment of excellent health and not materially frightened about the fever either. Strange as it may appear, people here do not look upon yellow fever with that dread as do the people North, but we all hope for its speedy abatement. Yours,

E. HAUSE.

THE BANNER FAIR.

The county fair at Adrian next week promises to be the most successful ever held. The secretary has been making entries for two weeks. The adjoining counties of Monroe, Washtenaw, Jackson and Hillsdale will be represented among the exhibits.—Horsemen need to be on the lookout lest premiums and patronage are carried away to other states and counties At this time the Wilkes horses from outside the county are upon the ground and will compete. Lenawee should look after her laurels in making a representation of stock of each kind. Every line and variety of commodities it is intended to encourage. It is hoped that the superintendents of schools throughout the county will take an interest in the educational department. The art and natural history divisions are of interest and should be well represented: and as has been suggested a collection of antiques, such as could be easily brought together, would be a source of pleasure to look upon. Select your seeds and grain, fruit, vegetablef, etc. Make your entries early and all prepare to spend at least two days at the county fair; no one can see one-half in less time. Poultry fanciers will find more money offered as premiums this year than ever before. A larger and more complete list. Good music, good purses, good races, and it is expected a base ball contest between Hudson, Wolf Creek, Clinton and Tecumseh clubs. Go and see who are the champions.

THE DICTIONARY IN THE SCHOOLROOM.

Being interested in all that pertains to the success and usefulness of our public schools, we would call the attention of educators to the value of early training in the use of language and the need of more thorough instruction in the knowledge of words. We mean the English language, and for the most part, good old Anglo-Saxon words.

We are constrained to believe that in far too many schools the ability to name words rapidly as they occur in the reading lessons, in the geography or the history is allowed to suffice as the full measure of instruction in the department of language, and the pupils thus pass to other fields without the ability to either correctly spell or properly pronounce the words they have used, and with no knowledge at all of their true signification or wealth of meaning.

The derivation or history of a word as found in the dictionary often opens up a most delightful field for study and investigation, and through this the learner's ambition to attain greater power and fluency in the use of words might be incited. We believe that the learned man is most clearly distinguished from the ignorant by his greater command of language and wider knowledge of the power of words. What better field can there be, then, for the development of a greater usefulness on the part of our public schools than through a larger and more intelligent study of our own vocabulary?

Fortunately we have a standard authority for the meaning and use of English words, a recognized and universally conceded court of last resort, an open "Webster," where are recorded for the use of all, the decisions of the best writers and speakers upon the correct usage of every item that goes to make up the beautiful whole of our mother tongue.

We believe that our public schools will attain a greater usefulness, and be more successful in teaching language just in the ratio that they send their pupils to the dictionary with more frequency, teaching them to study its record more intelligently and abide by its decisions more steadfastly. It needs no argument to prove that every schoolroom should be supplied with a copy of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, as the foundation for improved language work. As a further means to this desirable end, we can make no better recommendation than that every pupil should acquire the habit of constant reference to authority by having at his desk a copy of an abridged edition of Webster, and that every teacher should be competent to give instruction in its proper use.

Without disparaging the other abridgements, we regard Webster's Academic Dictionary as best of all for the hourly use of pupils, and when it is remembered that its usefulness will survive the pupil's school days, and in the absence of the unabridged, become the family dictionary, it is not too much to say that it should be found on the desk of every pupil in our schools above the most primary grades.

GOOD NEWS FROM JOHN C. TARSNEY.

Upon learning that our old friend John C. Tarsney, formerly of Hudson, had received the nomination for Congress in the Kansas City Dist. we took occasion to write him a brief letter of congratulation. His reply has the true ring and as John had a good many friends in this county, we give the public the benefit of a portion of his letter. John is a brother of "Our Tim" who now represents the Saginaw district. It is quite likely that the roll of the 51st congress will contain the names of two Tarsneys.

KANSAS CITY, AUG. 30, '88.

S. C. STACY.—Your kind letter of congratulation was duly received, and I assure you that such kind remembrances from the friends of my boyhood days are extremely gratifying to me. I received the nomination without an effort on my part, and my election is not involved in any doubt. The district has a democratic majority of 2000, but owing to factional quarrels, we have been defeated twice and the district is now represented, or misrepresented, by a republican. This year the party is thoroughly united; there is not a vestage of the old dissatisfaction remaining. My nomination has so harmonized the party that Mr. Warner, who now represents the district and who is an extremely popular man personally, positively declines to accept a nomination from his party and they are in chaos, having no other map of any strength willing to make any sacrifice of himself. I would be proud if you could redeem old Michigan this fall and bring her into line with Cleveland and the party of the people. My compliments to all my good Democratic friends in Old Lenawee, and let them rest assured that one district that did not vote right on the Mills bill in the fiftieth Congress, will be all right in the fifty-first.

JOHN C. TARSNEY.

TEMPERANCE WORK OF THE WORLD.

The above is the title of a new book just issued by Miss E. Cora DePuy. By the courtesy of the author, we have had the pleasure of perusing a copy, and from a hasty examination we are most favorably impressed with it. It is a neat pamphlet of 134 pages, sold at fifty cents. The contents disclose the fact that the author is well posted upon the subject discussed, and the composition is in a fluent style, making very entertaining reading. The following table of contents will show the general character of the work:

Chap. 1—The Liquor Question.
Chap. 2—Early Efforts to Regulate the Evil.
Chap. 3—The Famous Whisky Insurrection of 1794.
Chap. 4—The Beginning of Temperance Reformation.
Chapter 5—The First Temperance Newspaper.
Chap. 6—The Washingtonian Movement.
Chap. 7—Maine, the First Prohibition State.
Chap. 8—The National Temperance Society and Publication House.
Chap. 9—The National Prohibition Movement.
Chap. 10—The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America.
Chap. 11—The National W. C. T. U.
Chap. 12—The Centennial Temperance Conference, 1785-1885.
Chap. 13—Prohibitory Legislation—Vermont, Rhode Island, Mississippi, Georgia.
Chap. 14—Prohibitory Legislation—Ohio.
Chap. 15—Prohibitory Legislation—Kansas.
Chap. 16—Prohibitory Legislation—Iowa.
Chap. 17—Prohibitory Legislation—Michigan.
Chap. 18—The Prohibitory Amendment—The Attitude of the Daily Press of Michigan.
Chap. 19—The Election—Scenes at the Polls.

The book is printed for the author by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association, of Chicago, and is a very creditable piece of typography. In chapter seventeen several incidents are mentioned which transpired at Tecumseh during the Amendment campaign, notably the great speech of John B. Finch, in which he read the telegrams received here, costing him $37.50. The book deserves and will undoubtedly meet with a large sale.

Talk about the precision of the Boston girl!

WM. C. SHARP.

TO YOU PERSONALLY.

DEAR SIR:

We wish to call your attention to three facts concerning THE INTERNATIONAL CYCLOPEDIA.

1. It is the most comprehensive Cyclopedia in the world. There is perhaps only one other that contains as many titles, and that is condensed into three volumes, the value of its large number of subjects is marred by the necessarily brief and unsatisfactory manner in which they are treated. THE INTERNATIONAL in fifteen large, but not unwieldy, Royal Octavo volumes, can treat of its 50,000 titles with a degree of fullness sufficient to their importance. It is the fullest, not only in number of titles, but in the relative amount of matter given each title.

2. It has the advantage of being International. The Brittanica is lamentably deficient in American matter, and Appleton's is silent on many foreign subjects of interest. In THE INTERNATIONAL, the articles on foreign men, places, histories, laws, etc., are written chiefly by foreigners of distinction, while the articles pertaining to American interests have been prepared almost entirely by American editors. This gives THE INTERNATIONAL a COMPLETENESS wanting in other Cyclopedias.

3. It is the cheapest Cyclopedia of its size in the world. The Brittanica in its cheapest form costs $120. Appleton's in its cloth binding costs $85, which is more than we charge for THE INTERNATIONAL in its finest Morocco binding.

There are many other points showing the superiority of THE INTERNATIONAL over other works of reference. We merely select these three, urging them upon your earnest consideration.

We shall be glad to correspond with you further. Please reply.

Yours truly,

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A serial story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD, both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

No newspaper man in the country is able to write more intelligently about newspapers than Z. L. White, whose initials so long gave weight to the Washington dispatches of the New York Tribune; and more than usual interest, therefore, attaches to his article on "Western Journalism," which appears in Harper's Magazine for October. It is not only a historical sketch of the principal journals of the West and their editors, but it is a summary of their reputations and a fair estimate of their influence, political, moral and literary. Portraits are given of twenty-seven of the leading editors of the West, showing a set of men of marked energy, intelligence and ability.

The season is about over at the lake resorts. Cottagers are vacating and the hotels are closing for the winter.

There are a lot of dishes of various kinds at the rink, left there at the time of the band tournament. The owners are requested to take them away soon. A key to the rink will be found at Ed Rowland's.

Rev. T. G. Potter has been transferred from Tecumseh to Monroe. We regret exceedingly to have him leave here. His work has been fruitful of good results, and he leaves many friends behind who will bid him Godspeed in his new field of labor.

During the third act of Pygmalion and Galatea at the opera house Tuesday night, the audience was treated to a little comedy not down on the program. It was a refreshing bit of acting and the young man has a broad field open for displaying his talent. Might be termed a lightning change artist. Tumble?

Wonder who will get married on the fair grounds?—Morenci Observer. What's the use of wondering, why don't you go and do it yourself?—Hudson Gazette. It was fondly hoped that James Scheimerhorn, of Hudson, would avail himself of the excellent opportunity afforded by our fair managers to begin a wedded life; but at the last moment his spinal column weakened and he backed down. Very sorry.—Observer.

Next Saturday will witness a rousing democratic rally and pole raising in Clinton and Tecumseh. The ball will open at Bell Mills', one-half mile west of Clinton, at 9 o'clock a. m., and the route will be down the "west road" and through Newburg to Tecumseh. Twenty poles will be raised along the route. The programme will close with the Brownville pole raising and speaking at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The Tecumseh City Band has been engaged for the entire day and will escort the crowd all the way from Bell Mills'. This will eclipse the rally in the Tilden campaign when thirteen hickory poles were raised in one afternoon in the village of Tecumseh.

The majority of them are at residences, but beside those are a woolen mill, foundry, printing office, music house, two studios, etc. Then if the baby has a cramp in the middle of the night, two doctors will respond with two drug stores as a reserve. You can telegraph your spare change down to a bank or order up the latest daily from a news depot. There are any number of stores hitched on, keeping all kinds of wares, and besides all these you can reach three Western Union offices and a host of farmers. As to the political complexion of this company, we are not posted. You will have to call up R. J. W.

The attendance to the State Fair at Jackson last week from this section was much larger than usual. The fair was a grand success both financially and otherwise.

The reports of the yellow fever epidemic at Jacksonville show that drinking people are far more likely to succumb to its attacks than teetotelars. The fever goes hard with drinkers.

The members of Beers' Post who attended the G. A. R. Encampment at Columbus, all report a splendid time. They were royally entertained while there, although the city was crowded with strangers.

Geo. VanGieson of Clinton is working up a fine business in the Travis Blackboard eraser. During a short visit at Clinton last Monday we called to see him and found him busy as a bee. He is shipping off large qualities every week.

Are you going to the County Fair next week? We suppose so, of course, and you will be well paid for so doing. Entries are coming in at a lively rate and if the clerk of the weather shall be in a friendly mood the show will be larger than ever. There will be a good attendance from this section of the county.

Joe Smith has received a letter from O. P. Bills, dated at Charring Cross, City of London, Sept. 4th. He was enjoying himself, looking over the sights of the big city. The day before he wrote he visited the Bank of England and found they were doing quite a nice little business there. He expects to be home about the first of October.

Indian Relics and Natural History at the Lenawee county fair. Persons having fine specimens of the above which they would like to exhibit, should address E. L. Mills, Secy. Adrian, for premium list. A single specimen is desirable if it be fine. The societies that have made exhibits for several years will probably not do so this season. E. W. Allis and Fred. B. Stebbins, Supts.

The Tecumseh correspondent of the Adrian Times says: "A large number of our citizens of all political leanings, with the city band, went to Britton, Monday afternoon, to listen to the tariff discussion between Capt. Allen and Bro. Stearns. As one man who stayed at home said, he asked ten democrats, and they claimed that Stearns mopped the floor with Allen; ten republicans said that Allen just wiped the earth with Stearns. At last accounts he was hunting for a prohibitionist to decide."

The Hudson Gazette of last week contains the following notice of the death of Mrs. Chas. Brown of this village, whose former home was at Hudson.

The remains of Mrs. Julia Brown (nee Tillapaw) were brought here for burial Sunday morning, her death having occurred the day before of typhoid fever. On account of the disease being declared contagious by many, the remains were taken to the cemetery at one P. M. The party then returned to the M. E. church, where the funeral services were held. Mr. Storms preached an able discourse to a good-sized audience. Prior to her marriage Julia resided in this place many years, and it seems but yesterday that her smiling countenance was amongst us. She had many friends, both old and young, here who deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and parents. Her sickness was short, but a few days having elapsed since she was about. She leaves two children, one being two years of age and the other six months.

A few years ago Gen. Alger, at that time Governor of Michigan, gave to Gen. Sheridan $10,000 in money, upon condition that it should be invested in a life insurance policy, and that the policy should be kept up for the benefit of his widow. The money was invested in a policy for $25,000, and inquiry, since the death of General Sheridan at the office of the Connecticut company was answered by a statement that there had been no default in the payment upon it. The original intention of Gen. Alger was, therefore, carried out, and the policy remains to the benefit of the widow.

G. W. Smith, of Adrian, was in town yesterday.

Mark Ellsworth, of Oregon, is visiting at J. D. Shull's.

Mrs. Oscar Palmer returned from Elkhart yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jo. Crosby are visiting friends in Dundee.

C. E. Williamson is giving his store front a new coat of paint.

Mrs. N. R. Brown went to Chicago Tuesday for a week's stay.

Mrs. A. L. Harris and daughter, of Reedsburg, Wis., are the guests of Mrs. P. C. Temple.

Our veteran clothiers, Strong & McNair, have a new card this week that everyone should read.

The printers' sweet tooth was filled up yesterday by a box of fresh candy, donated by Will Anderson.

Mr. McCarthy and the glee club will speak and sing at Ridgeway next Saturday eve, after the pole raising.

Several parties from this vicinity took in the excursion to Perry, N. Y., over the Mackinaw line last Monday.

John J. White of Clinton, called last Saturday. He made an exhibit at the State Fair last week and carried off the first prize.

As our report of the Britton debate last week was very much condensed we give it in supplement form this week, revised, corrected and in full.

Russell & Palmer are cultivating several acres of celery this year on Joe Russell's farm, west of Ell Gray's. Their land, they claim, is equal to the best for celery raising.

Walter Westerman, of Adrian, one of the foremost among the young attorneys of this county, a Republican heretofore, has come out for Cleveland and Reform.

Elias Fessenden, of Mt. Pleasent, was in town the first of the week, to attend the funeral of his sister, Mrs. P. W. Adams. He is the present sheriff of Isabella county.

E. L. Russell has about three acres of celery on his farm this season, and it is looking very thrifty. He has about ten acres on his farm which he will probably utilize for celery hereafter.

Mr. Dell Worthington, of Mendon, has taken a position in Will Anderson's grocery store. He has had a large experience in the grocery business and will prove a valuable acquisition to Will's force.

The K. of L. Assembly of Tecumseh will give a dance at their hall, next Friday evening, the 28th. Good music in attendance; bill only fifty cents. Let the dancers turn out and give them a good party.

James W. Patterson is about to embark in the coal and lumber business at Elkhart, in company with his brother-in-law, Mr. Simons. He will not move his family from Tecumseh, however, at least not for the present.

Prof. H. E. Speedy and wife, of Detroit, will open a dancing school in Armory hall, Friday, Sept. 21. A free exhibition will be given at 8 o'clock, after which dancing and forming a class will be the order. Turn out, if only to the exhibition.

The Republican Representative Convention for the first district was held at Britton last Tuesday. Every town in the district was represented. Hon. M. T. Cole, the present incumbent was renominated by acclamation.—He was present and accepted the honor in a few happy remarks.

Joseph H. McCarthy, of Albion college, has been speaking in this county during the past week, under the auspices of the Prohibition county committee. His meetings are said to be very interesting, and many in this locality were desirous of hearing him. Arrangements have been made, if the weather is favorable, for an afternoon outdoor meeting next Saturday at 3 o'clock, on the corners by the bankrupt store.

Mr. Francis Labadie appeared in "Pygmalion and Galatea" before a small house Tuesday evening, but the size of the audience did not affect the actors unless for the better, as Mr. Labadie and wife sustained their roles in a manner that was pleasing as well as surprising. They constitute the whole company and the play is necessarily trimmed down to fit the cast. Nevertheless, those who saw them on Tuesday night will, doubtless agree that Mr. Labadie and wife are a whole show in themselves. The afterpiece was especially amusing.

The effects of the victory in Maine so far appear to have had a stupefying power over those who at first proclaimed it most loudly, and the publication of the official figures has given no relief, as may be seen from this comparison.

Mrs. Fred Burger started for Elgin, Ill., Tuesday, to visit her children.

Married, on Wednesday, Sept. 12th, by Rev. J. M. Getchell, at the parsonage of the Universalist church, Tecumseh, Mr. George A. Lair and Miss Elva Smith, both of Cambridge, Lenawee county, Michigan.

R. Caldwell, of Franklin, is well pleased with his trip to the state fair. His rack was examined by at least 400 persons, the majority of whom were farmers, and all acknowledged it to be the handiest, most easily adjusted and most "Common Sense" rack they had ever seen. A farmer who lives near Hanover, Jackson county, ordered two to be shipped to him as soon as possible. Another goes to Battle Creek, and four more go to persons in Lenawee county. Mr. Caldwell had several applications from agents all over the state to sell his racks.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for October contains many interesting and valuable articles, all freshly written and brightly illustrated. The continued story, "Genevieve," opens the number. It is a story of the Huguenot troubles in France. Mrs. Alexander contributes a very touching story, "Faithful in Duty," and "Rubens," by C. B. Todd, is a story about an intelligent and faithful dog. The illustrated articles are, "Pioneer Missions in Central Africa," by Emma Raymond Pitman, with portraits of celebrated African explorers; "Marseilles," by L. E. C.; "Cave Homes and Shrines," by Mary F. Valette; "Dolls and Dollmakers"; Francis Scott Key," by Walter Edgar M'Cann; and "Mme. Dieulafoy and her Travels." A vigorous sermon by Dr. Talmage, entitled "The Age of Swindle," will provoke thought and comment. The poems and short articles are numerous and good, and there are a number of full-page engravings of much beauty. It is a specially good number of this favorite family magazine.

What Every Woman Wants is a magazine that gives the latest fashion news, first-class fiction, and fine engravings. This is exactly what can be said for "Peterson;" any lady has only to glance over the October number to see that it is a real treasury of feminine needs. It is replete with beautiful steel and wood engravings, capital stories, good poetry, and useful articles on miscellaneous subjects. It gives, as usual, a double-size steel fashion plate, beautifully colored, numerous designs for dress and toilet articles, and has, besides, plenty of reliable information as to what will be worn later in the season. There is no doubt that "Peterson's" popularity steadily increases; and it ought to do so, for it comes out each month as fresh and blooming as a first number could, in spite of the fact that it has been doing this for nearly fifty years. This is the time for ladies to begin getting up clubs. "Peterson's" inducements to club getters are always tempting; but the premiums announced for next year are finer and more numerous than ever. Send for a sample copy. Terms: Two Dollars a year. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306, Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Inter-State Industrial Exposition at Chicago.

For the sixteenth consecutive year Chicago opens up its great Inter State Industrial Exposition, replete with the best products of Science, Industry and Art, on Wednesday, Sept. 5, and closing Saturday, Oct. 20.

The immense structure is now laden to its fullest capacity with the finest and most magnificent exhibits ever displayed; from almost every quarter of the civilized world, illustrating as it does every avenue of human industry in its most complete form, it is almost a necessity that they who would keep abreast of our most advanced ideas in both industry, science and art, should not fail to visit this great exposition.

Every railroad and transportation line running into the city have made reduced rates, and there is every indication that a much larger attendance will follow than any year that has preceded.

RESOLUTIONS OF BEERS POST.

WHEREAS, the Supreme and Most High Commander of the Universe in His wisdom did on Sunday, August 5, 1888, transfer our comrade, Philip Henry Sheridan, from the department of this earth to a higher field, it is therefore RESOLVED by Beers Post No. 140, Dept. of Michigan, G. A. R., that in the death of General Sheridan this nation sustained the loss of a true patriot, the U. S. army was bereft of a great captain, and the G. A. R. sorrows for a member who was alike lovable as a comrade, successful as a soldier, and grand as a leader of men. Posterity will give him an honored niche in the temple of fame. History will tell to ages yet unborn the story of his glorious career, and engrave in imperishable characters upon her indestructible tablets, the achievements of a remarkable man.

Alert, resolute, enthusiastic and irresistible in battle, he was also observant, studious and discreet in planning his campaigns. His impetuosity was equalled by his prudence. He charged with his infantry as if they had been cavalry, and with his cavalry he resisted as though they were infantry. By a life of faithfully performed duties he won the plaudits and approval of an admiring world; and a grateful country with trembling voice whispers, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and praverfully adds, "May thou surely now enter into the higher service and joy of thy Lord."

OBITUARY.

Died, in this village, on the morning of Sept. 16, 1888, Mrs Clara M. Adams, wife of P. W. Adams. The deceased was born in Attica, N. Y., on July 26, 1836, and was therefore 52 years of age at her last birthday.

She was the daughter of Joseph and Rosina Fessenden, and was one of a family of ten children. Only four remain, Mr. Elias Fessenden, of Mt. Pleasant, Mich.; Joel Fessenden, of Adrian; Mrs. Diana Peck, of Cooperville, Mich.; and Mrs. Lucy Cheever, of this village. Her father, mother and two sisters now rest with her here in the quiet city of our dead. She came with her parents to Michigan in 1854, and settled in the township of Raisin in this county, and was married to P. W. Adams on Oct. 23, 1855. For over 32 years she has been the brightes jewel in her husband's heart, who, together with a daughter, Mrs. Emla C. Emmett, a son, Calvin R., and five grandchildren, are left to mourn the loss of a most faithful and loving wife, mother and grandmother. With the exception of a short residence in Indiana and Kansas, and six years in Delaware, her married life has been spent here.

In December 1886 she contracted a cold which terminated in that deadly disease consumption. For nearly two years she combatted it heroically, patiently and uncomplainingly. She returned with her family to this village to reside last November, when she gradually succumbed to the fell destroyer. She was of a retiring disposition, devoted to her family and beloved by all who knew her. Her funeral services were held at the family residence on the 18th inst. and were largely attended. Words of comfort and consolation were spoken by Rev. F. Atkins, pastor of the Baptist church. The sympathy of numberless old friends here in Michigan and of many recent acquaintances in distant Delaware will reach out to the bereaved husband and family in this, their sore affliction.

Which says, I must not stay;

Nintzer's mill dam, at Newaygo, took a trip down stream on the 9th, carrying away the C. & W. M. railway bridge, necessitating the transfer of passengers at that point. Loss, $10,000.

While George Havek sat and family, Frenchtown folks, were at church, four tramps ransacked their house, but failed to find a large sum of money that was well secreted. When George returned and saw how the land lay, he shouldered his shotgun and captured three of the marauders, landing them in the calaboose.

Willie Brown, a Cadillac boy of 9 summers, has a daily task to hunt up the family cow at night that roams in the woods at her own sweet will. But one day the cow had roamed farther than usual, and as darkness enveloped the land Willie was far from home and without the object of his search. So he ate some berries for supper and made a bed of some boughs, sleeping soundly all night. Whenfound the next day by his father he was still patiently searching for the lost cow.

DEATH OF MOSES.

LESSON XIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 23.

Text of the Lesson, Deut. xxxiv, 1-12. Commit Verses 5-7—Golden Text, Prov. iv. 18—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

"And Moses went up." Many a time had Moses gone up on a mountain to meet and talk with God, but never before had he gone up not to return. There is something so mysterious about the going out of a person from the tabernacle in which one has sojourned on earth, either for few or many years, that though one may have witnessed many such events it is ever a most solemn sight. When the one called upon to depart can cheerfully say, Even so, Father, I am ready, and quietly arrange all earthly matters, then joyfully await the call, it is indeed a glorious sight. Blessed be God that He has taught us in His word, and by the lives of many of His saints, that it is possible, and our privilege, so to walk with Him here that we may lose all fear of death and daily rejoice in the prospect of being absent from the body and present with the Lord whenever He shall see that our work here is finished. Moses had long ago forsaken all the pleasures and vanities of this world, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; and for at least eighty years he had endured, as seeing Him who is invisible (Heb. xi. 24-27). But now his work in a mortal body was finished; it was the eleventh month of the fortieth year since they left Egypt (Deut. i, 3), and he had rehearsed to them all the way by which they had been led, and all the commandments of the Lord; he had given them another song, and had blessed the tribes (chs. xxxii, xxxiii), both song and blessing reaching on to the time of their, to us, still future glory; he had appointed his successor and laid his hands upon him, and given him a charge in the sight of all the congregation (Num. xxvii, 12-23), and now he is to be gathered unto his people.

1-3. "And the Lord shewed him all the land." He is now alone with God, the people all left behind, his earthly work laid down; but before he departs from earth he is permitted to see that good land which, on account of sin, he was not permitted to enter. He had besought the Lord to let him go over and see the land, but the answer was, "Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter: thou shalt behold it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over this Jordan. (Deut. iii, 23-27.) When Paul besought the Lord thrice for the removal of the thorn in the flesh, the Lord's answer was, "My grace is sufficient for thee." In Paul's case the denial of the request and the continuance of the infirmity was lest he should be exalted above measure; in the case of Moses, his request was denied because of his sin (Num. xxvii, 14), which, although forgiven, still left a present unpleasant result. Fourteen hundred years later Moses did stand in that good land, when with Elijah he talked with Jesus of His decease about to be accomplished.

4. "This is the land which I swore unto Abraham." The promise had been made nearly 500 years before (Gen. xii, 7), yet Abraham had received no inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on (Acts vii, 5). His seed, which has grown from one to millions, is now about to take possession of it, but they did not possess it fully, nor use it well when they got it, and now for more than 1,800 years they have been out of it, and yet it is their land, and God will make good to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, personally, his personal promise to them. God lives, the persons live to whom the promise was made, Jesus lives who died and rose again, all the promises of God in him are yea and in Him amen; one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; be patient, be trustful, be steadfast, be fully persuaded, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God; the resurrection will make it all plain, see that you take part in the first one.

5. "So Moses, the servant of the Lord, died." Although before the deluge people lived seven, eight and nine hundred years, yet in due time they died. "It is appointed unto men once to die" (Heb. ix. 27), and yet there is a common saying to this effect—one thing is sure, we must all die—which is not correct, for the Spirit says through Paul in I Cor. xv, 51-52 that we shall not all sleep (or die), but in the twinkling of an eye be changed at the sounding of the trumpet. So says the Spirit also in I Thess. iv, 16-18. All true believers who are alive when Christ returns shall for His sake be excused from keeping their appointment, and being instantly changed, shall be caught up to meet Christ in the air.

6. "And He buried him." Most unique death and burial ever accorded to mortal; God and angels welcome him to the spirit world and the Lord buries his body. When we bury the bodies of our loved ones, though we lay away the form we have looked upon, our friends with form and features just as real have passed beyond our reach; and from the dust of the corruptible body shall come at the resurrection an immortal, incorruptible body with the same form and features, glorified, in which the spirit shall again take up its residence, be rewarded for service done in the mortal body, be at the marriage of the Lamb, and then with Christ reign over the earth. How long the body of Moses remained buried we are not told; but that he had the risen body on the Mount of Transfiguration seems evident from Jude ix, for not only does the devil hate to give up a soul to Christ, but he also hates to have to give up the body of a saint from the grave. And if the Man Child of Rev. xii, 5, includes the risen saints of Israel, we can understand something of the cause of the war in heaven there referred to between the same two parties.

8. "The children of Israel wept for Moses thirty days." If departed friends have gained by their departure we cannot mourn for them. "If ye loved me—said Jesus on the night of his betrayal—ye would have rejoiced because I go unto the Father" (John xiv, 28). If we believe that our loved ones are with Christ in paradise we cannot but be glad for them. We sorrow because of our loss and because of this enemy death, which because of sin continues its fearful work with the bodies of men. But let us look up, for death itself shall be destroyed.

9. "Joshua was full of the spirit of wisdom." Joseph is spoken of as one in whom was the spirit of God (Gen. xli, 38); when seventy were appointed to assist Moses, God took of the Spirit that was upon him and put it upon them (Num. xi. 17); Bezaleel was filled with the Spirit to execute the work for the Tabernacle (Ex. xxxi, 3); all the prophets spake by the Spirit; the Spirit spake and wrought all that Jesus Himself said and did; the apostles had to wait at Jerusalem until they received the baptism of the Spirit; and unless we today are filled with the same Spirit of God we shall be barren and unfruitful in His service.

HOW RUBBER SHOES ARE MADE.

From Native Tree to the Finished Product in the Store.

Supplementary to the great shoemaking business is the rubber industry, for which Boston is the great centre in this country. Forty million dollars' worth of rubber shoes and boots are sold in the modern Athens annually.

The raw material comes from Para, Brazil, in large lumps which the natives make by dipping sticks in the sap of the caoutchouc tree and turning them round and round with frequent plunges into the heated rubber over a hot fire.

These lumps, upon reaching the factory are cut in slices, which are run through rollers and pressed out thin and flat like pancakes. The sheets thus obtained are next put through other rollers, heated to a high temperature and incidentally amalgamated with a composition of lampblack, sulphur and litharge, which reduces them to a soft and putty-like consistency.

Finally, in this soft condition, they are passed over steel rollers bigger than any that have gone before, and actually incorporated with the tissue of a woollen cloth which is destined to serve as the lining of the eventful boot or shoe.

If you will try to pull apart the lining and outer coat of a rubber sandal you will obtain a notion of the thoroughness with which this part of the manufacture is performed.

The rubber sheets thus prepared are passed through a last set of rollers on which are engraved all the markings and corrugations of the sole and upper that appear in the completed article.

The rubber sheets are now ready for the cutter, who turns out the various pieces by hand, with the aid of a knife and patterns. The parts are then put together by other workmen with rubber tape.

When this much has been accomplished the shoe or boot is lasted in the usual way, and after being varnished, is allowed to remain for eight hours in a room heated to the temperature of 235 degrees. The heat sets the varnish and tempers the rubber, which is then "vulcanized."

The stamping of the firm name on the sole is the concluding operation, and then the rubber shoe is ready for sale.

A BRASS MULE'S POWERS.

The Art of Healing Greatly Simplified.

A friend, recently returned from Pekin, tells us that he saw a method of cure which may be new to some of our readers.

In a temple outside one of the city gates is to be found a brass mule of life size, supposed to have wonderful healing properties. Patients suffering from every imaginable disease seek this temple to obtain a cure.

The method pursued is as follows:

Suppose you suffer from sciatica, you go with all speed to this famous temple, and, having discovered the particular part of the brass mule corresponding to the painful region of your own body, you first rub the animal a certain number of times and then with the same hand shampoo your own disabled member, and then—well, then the pain goes.

The special feature of this method of cure is its delightful simplicity. Is your tooth aching? Just scrub the mule's teeth and afterwards your own, and, voila! the cure is complete.

Have you an ulcer of the cornea? Pass the tips of your fingers to and fro over the particular eyeball of the mule, and then with well-regulated pressure rub repeatedly the afflicted eye.

The mule has unhappily lost his sight during the many years he has been engaged in his benevolent work, the eyeballs, we are told, having been gradually worn away, as the result of constant friction, until now you have only the empty orbits to operate upon.

The animal is patched in all directions with fresh pieces of brass put on to cover holes produced by the constant friction of eager patients, and a new, perfectly whole mule stands ready at hand awaiting the day when his old colleague, having fallen to pieces, shall give him an opportunity of likewise benefiting posterity.

Equal to the Occasion.

The child had been piously brought up. She had been taught to say grace and her prayers, and everything that a tender mother could do to keep her pure and innocent and make her refined had been done.

She had been out playing late, and when she came in to dinner they were all at the table. She threw her hat in a corner and was immediately told to hang it up. She did so, and then clambered up on her chair.

She was about to start in on her soup, when the mother looked very reproachfully at her.

"Maria! haven't you forgotten something?"

"No, ma."

"I thought I told you you must always say grace."

The child put her little hands together, raised her eyes towards heaven with childish earnestness, and said simply and reverently:

"Let her go, Gallagher."

Mrs. Smith's Ill Luck.

A middle aged girl and a girl of girlish age were seated in a crowded horse car chatting in so loud a tone that at least one-half of the passengers could hear them.

"Wasn't that really too bad about poor Mrs. Smith?" said one of them.

"Why, I haven't heard of it. Please tell me," said the other.

"Oh, haven't you heard of it? Why, dear me, I supposed everybody knew of it. You know the great trouble she had in getting a divorce from her husband," said the one.

"Oh, yes; but she got it, didn't she?" asked the other.

"Yes, but she had to pay $400 for it."

"But she ought to be satisfied with that, hadn't she?"

"Well, hardly; her husband, just to show how mean he could be if he wanted to, died the week after she paid $400, and she had all her expense and trouble for nothing."

An Unfilled Want.

First Swell—"There goes Miller, the richest man in town. What a pity the old fellow has no daughter. Don't you think so?"

Second Swell—"I don't know. Why?"

TATE SPRINGS, TENN., July 4, 1888.

The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:

During the spring of 1871, while working in the field at my home in Morgan county, Ga., I pulled off my shoes to give my feet a rest. Unfortunately, I walked into a clump of poison oak, and in a few days my feet were in a terrible condition, and I could not put on a shoe because of the soreness and swelling. I was treated as poison oak cases usually are, and everything was healed up. About the same time the following spring, 1872, my feet became sore again, as at first, and every succeeding spring for five years brought back the same condition of the disease, only each time it became more distressing, because I began to think it was a lifelong trouble. Finally, I was induced to try Swift's Specific. I took six bottles, and to-day am entirely well. My improvement was gradual from the first, and no evidence of the disease remains. I shall take pleasure in testifying as to its curative properties. It is the greatest blood purifier in existence. Yours truly, J. L. MORGAN.

The foregoing certificate is taken at random from thousands of letters in possession of the Swift Specific Co., and presented simply as a sample. It is a voluntary statement, giving facts and results of the case. Its accuracy and genuineness are beyond question.

THE JACKALS OF CALCUTTA.

Their Great Usefulness Modified by the Intolerable Music They Make.

Kind friends had warned us, ere we retired to sleep the first night in Calcutta, not to suppose that there was anything the matter if we should hear the cry of the jackals. But for the warning I do not know what our feelings would have been when, awakened from our first sleep by them, we heard a pack pass close to the house.

It seemed to us as though the conscience of the whole city had unbarred the portals of hell and put a trumpet in the hand of every liberated fiend. I had presumptuously imagined that familiarity with the concerts of London cats would enable me to sleep through the jackals' efforts.

But though the cat has undeniable power he can never hope to reach the top notes of the jackal. The latter, indeed, lacks the conversational variety of the more domestic animal.

He confines himself mainly to one tune, which begins in a semi-apologetic low note, then ascends a little, still with a suspicion of apology and explanation that he did not mean to make quite so much noise, but could not help it; and then the floodgates are open, and seeming to say that he does not care, he yells with sarcastic abandon.

Terrible as a "wandering voice" of the night, the jackal appears a poor creature should he be come upon in his own proper person by day. True, his teeth are to be respected, but that is because, like all carrion feeders, his bite is more or less poisonous. He is himself a sneaking coward, useful, however, beyond description.

No system of drainage will enable Calcutta to dispense with its natural scavengers, and of these the jackal is among the most efficient. Peering into dark corners and with a nose keen to scent out what has escaped even the crow's bright eye, little as that seems to miss, he fills a special place in the sanitary economy of the city of palaces.—Turbans and Tails.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Cady Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and now able to do all my own housework and owe my thanks to Electric Bitters. I having renewed my youth, and improved completely all disease are gone."

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many diseases that originate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. The Restorative Nervine a brain and nerve food, sold by Baker & Hall cures weakness, want of appetite, exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and dissipation. It takes the place of stimulates, opiates, chloral, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or danger drugs.

THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE TIPPECANOE

LOG CABINS are neither fashionable nor independent, but they were more comfortable and more healthy than are many modern dwellings. Warner's Log Cabin Hops & Buchu is a reproduction of one of the best of the simple remedies which Log Cabin dwellers of old days kept them selves well. Did you ever try "Tippecanoe"?

"So here I am writing at home dear,
And you so far away,
And, when you read the letter,
I wonder what you will say.
The green leaves whisper around me,
The nightingales sing above,
Just as they did that day, dear,
When you told me all your love!"

"I can see her" he fondly whispered,
As he sat by the far camp fire.
And read and read her letter
With heart that could never tire.
"I can see her true eyes shining
As she leans on her little hand,
And gazes and dreams about me
Here in this distant land."

The bugle rang out at midnight,
The fight was lost ere morn.
He fell, with his old battalion,
Leading a hopeless forlorn.
While at home the sun is shining,
And the roses of June unfold.
But the maiden is quietly weeping
As she dreams her dream of old.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. A. B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after seven physicians as predicted he would soon leave consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1 00

Symptoms of Heart Disease.

Diseased hearts are as common as diseased lungs, kidneys or stomach, but are less understood. The symptoms are shortness of breath, when weeping, etc., oppression in the chest, faint, weak or hungry spells, dreaming, pain or tenderness in the side, swelling feet, dropsy, etc. The unnatural circulation of the blood in the lungs, stomach, kidneys, liver and brain causes other symptoms. The only reliable remedy for the heart yet discovered is Dr. Miles' New Cure. Try it and be convinced. Sold by Baker & Hall.

The HERALD and Courier-Journal will be sent to Jan. 1, '89 for one dollar.

THE YELLOW EPIDEMIC.

Great Increase of the Number of New Cases—The Death Roll.

JACKSONVILLE, LOOKING WEST.

ported to the board of health for the twenty-four hours ended at 6 p. m. The deaths are: Louis Nelson, Harry Kimball, Abram Mychird, Harry Hines, Edward Carr, Harris Southern, Kate Mornat, Henry Lescourre, Mrs. James M. Matthews. Total cases to date, 995; deaths, 126.

Fourteen nurses sent by Harry Miner from New York have arrived. Twenty-three nurses from New Orleans have also arrived. Among the new cases are Col. Whitfield Walker, internal revenue collector for Florida, and Mrs. Walker. Col. Walker is doing well.

The weather is still unsettled. Main street was deserted anew with lime yesterday. The sick are mostly reported doing well, and arrangements for taking care of the unfortunates are daily growing better.

The Masonic fraternity has sent out an appeal to brethren. Contributions may be sent to the Masonic relief committee, etc.

A ROW IN A CHURCH

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 17.—"Murder!" "Help!" "Police!" screamed more than a hundred women and children as they ran out of Westminster Presbyterian church at 11:40 Sunday morning. There was a great commotion inside, and in five minutes more than 1,000 people had gathered about the sacred edifice. A free fight was going on in the church in which everybody seemed to be taking a hand. Organist Joseph Smyth was pulled backward from his stool by Elder Jefferson, and fists were used with effect by half a dozen persistoners. Finally the police rushed in and quelled the disturbance.

The fight was a culmination of a quarrel between factions of the parish over the alleged immorality of Pastor W. H. Roberts. The preacher was acquitted, but requested to resign. His last sermon was preached a week ago, and Sunday the new pastor, Rev. M. D. Edwards, took the pulpit and preached an eloquent sermon on the "Beatitudes." It was immediately after this sermon, while the Sunday school was gathering, that the row occurred. Henry Hawthorne, the brother of Attorney Hawthorne, who was horsewhipped a month ago by the girl accused of intimacy with Pastor Roberts, made some reference to that matter. One of the opposing faction took exceptions to his statement. The whole congregation got interested and the free fight ensued.

Professor Wiggins' Predictions.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Blakely Hall has interviewed Professor Wiggins in Ottawa on various weather topics. "Jacksonville," says Wiggins, "will certainly have a frost between Oct. 3 and 9, and not before. The autumn will be cold all through September, and very cold weather will occur from the 3d to the 9th of October throughout the whole of North America. This lowering of temperature will be caused by the moon's junction when in perigee and the peculiar position of the planets Mars and Jupiter. The cold weather will wipe out the yellow fever in Jacksonville. I have a strong suspicion that serious seismic disturbances may shortly occur on this continent.

Went Safely Through Niagara Rapids.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 17.—A special to The Herald from Suspension Bridge says: Charles A. Percy, the whirlpool rapids navigator of this place, and who has been preparing to take a trip through the rapids for the past week, started from the old Maid of the Mist landing at 4:35 p. m. Saturday. When he struck the rapids by Manning's elevator his boat capsized, but righted below Buttery's elevator. He was twenty-one minutes going through. No damage was done to the boat. The woman who had intended to go through with him backed out.

AN OSTRICH FARM.

Watching a Young Bird Break Out of Its Immense Shell.

We passed along, writes a correspondent from Los Angeles, Cal., with scarce a glance at these side shows, for we were anxious to face an ostrich—with a stout fence between.

We found as we approached that this protective provision was doubly emphasized, for there were two stout wooden railings keeping us at a respectful distance from his majesty, stalking around in solitary grandeur, or stopping to gaze at us with a vicious craning of his long lean neck.

There were twenty full grown ostriches, each in a separate pen, or rather open space fenced in. They looked about seven feet high, even taller when they suddenly stretched out their necks. But, oh, the gorgeousness of their wings! Great masses of rich, black, velvety ostrich plumes, drooping off into a snowy white cluster at their tips. I wonder that kings do not renounce the traditional ermine and assume these more majestic emblems of royalty.

These birds are perfectly bare above the neck and legs, and though their whole body is covered with rich plumes, the fullest and longest and choicest are gathered from their wings. Twice a year they are plucked, and the annual revenues which they bring to their possessor, is according to all accounts quite a little fortune. The finest pair are valued at $800.

They live on alfalfa, a sort of clover (of which this country produces three and four crops a year), pounded oyster shells and corn, their prodigious digestive powers rather snubbed, it seems to me, by this mild diet; perhaps, however, it serves to slacken their depraved propensities, for I was told that only a short time before one of the keepers was picked and bitten to death by the savage onslaught of one of these birds.

The ostrich eggs are huge affairs, as large around as a quart measure. They lay out in the open field, and just as I was hanging over the fence, wickedly waving my jacket to make the majestic ostrich perform an undignified pirouette, one of the eggs broke open and out popped a little ostrich.

Immediately there was a great commotion and everybody rushed breathlessly in our direction. The keeper was told the news, and came hurrying on with ejaculations of surprise. He vaulted the two fences at this furthest distance from the mother ostrich and made in the direction of the new comer; but when the mother bird took long strides in his direction, and manifested a lively curiosity as to his purpose, the keeper vaulted again over the nearest fence and disappeared from the scene.

It was quite comical to see the old bird with her new-born offspring. At first she disdained to notice the little thing, which looked about the size of a two months old chicken, and sought to follow the parental guidance by running a few steps, and then quite unexpectedly toppling over or turning a feeble somersault.

I had quite hateful feelings against the mother bird, who by this time stood prancing before us with her long, beautiful droopy plumes. I think she saw by our expressions that we did not approve of such Spartan motherhood, such unnatural calming of the emotions, for she immediately turned upon her heel and bestowed a motherly kiss upon her solitary scion.

There was a thrill of satisfaction along the whole line of spectators when she finally sat down upon her nest and drew the ugly duckling under the shelter of her rarely plumaged wings.

A GOOD EXCUSE

The Ready Wit of a Soldier Gets Him Out of a Bad Scrape.

When the French troops were in Mexico during the days of Maximilian, a private soldier was brought before General Geningros, who was in command at Monterey.

"You are charged with having stolen the golden slipper from the foot of the Virgin in the cathedral," said the General, sternly.

"I didn't steal it," replied the soldier.

"But the slipper was found in your knapsack."

"I know it was, but I didn't steal it."

"How, then, did it come into your possession?"

"The Virgin gave it to me."

"How so?"

"You know, General, how she sits there with one foot over the other, sticking out a little."

"Well?"

"She didn't tell me to take the slipper, but she held her foot out as if she were saying 'Take the slipper, if you want it,' so I took it, more as a matter of accommodation than anything else."

"Humph," said the General, smiling, "that's about as good an excuse as I ever heard. You can go this time, but if the Virgin offers you anything else and you accept it, I'll have you shot."

Sudden Loss of Memory.

Sudden forgetfulness is not an unusual thing in the pulpit.

Aubrey, the antiquary, says that when he was a Freshman at college he heard Dr. Sanderson, Bishop of Lincoln, well known for his work, "Nine Cases of Conscience," break down in the middle of the Lord's prayer.

Even the great French preacher Massillon once stopped in the middle of a sermon from a defect of memory, and Massillon himself recorded that the same thing happened through excess of apprehension to two other preachers whom he went to hear in different parts of the same day.

Another French preacher stopped in the middle of a sermon and was unable to proceed. The pause was, however, got over ingeniously. "Friends," said he, "I had forgot to say that a person much afflicted is recommended to your immediate prayers." He meant himself.

He fell on his knees, and before he rose he had recovered the thread of his discourse, which he concluded, without his want of memory being perceived.—Chambers's Journal.

Her Little Brother.

Featherly was making his customary Wednesday night call, and Bobby was sustaining his part of the conversation with his usual ease and fluency.

"Ma," he said, "do people who steal get into trouble?"

"Certainly, Bobby. Why?"

"I heard Clara say that Mr. Featherly would get into trouble if he didn't stop stealing kisses."

THE BANANA TRADE.

Exportation of the Fruit from Jamaica—The Cultivation and Marketing of This Delicious and Wholesome Article of Diet.

The export of bananas from Jamaica to America has of late years become important. The Atlas Steamship Company, trading between Jamaica and New York, carries at least 50,000 bunches of bananas every month, besides other steamers trading with Kingston.

The Atlas steamers call for this favorite fruit at Kingston, Port Morant, Morant Bay, and Annatto Bay. The other companies' vessels carry from 8,000 to 10,000 bunches per month.

Besides this large quantity of bananas, there are from 10,000 to 15,000 barrels of oranges exported from the island to New York, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia and other ports.

The banana tree bears but one bunch in its life; and when this is cut the tree dies, leaving, however, numerous suckers, which soon come up, and thus replace the old tree. The growth is very fast; it is going on all the year round.

Some bunches weigh as much as 150 pounds, the average being from 80 to 90 pounds.

The average number of bananas on each bunch is about 300.

The fruit is very delicate, and requires much care in cutting, transit and shipping. Too much heat in the hold of the ships will ripen it too quickly, so that often a whole shipload may arrive in New York worthless and rotten. On the other hand, an excess of cold will chill the fruit, so as to make it unfit for the market.

The proper temperature should be from 50 to 60 degrees in the hold. The best fruit steamers trading in the West Indies are especially ventilated for the purpose.

Women, who are the principal workers in the field, carry the bunches on their heads, from the tree to an open spot, where they are packed in carts, to be taken down to the store at the seacoast. In their working dress, as in most parts of the West Indies, the women tie a string round themselves, and then, drawing the dress up through it, succeed in arranging the dress short enough, so that they may not be prevented from walking freely.

The carriage of the fruit to the shore is undertaken by both sexes, the men driving mule and pony carts (and many quiet races take place on the road), and the woman carrying bunches on the head—young girls coming in for their share of the work.

The fruit is then carefully packed in large sheds to await the arrival of the steamer, which has, of course, either been telegraphed, or is known to be due on a certain day.

On board the Ailsa steamship, the bananas arrived quite green, but in five days they were ripened in quite an alarming manner. This shows what judgment is necessary for the proper picking and packing to insure the arrival of the fruit in America in good condition.

Immediately on the arrival of the vessel in the port or bay the process of loading small boats is begun. This is done, of course, again by women; the only men to be seen about are the overseers and contractors. The boats, when full, are rowed alongside the steamers, and the fruit is carefully packed away in the hold.

The steamer I was on actually took on board 15,000 bunches, which seemed to change but very little on the voyage. It is a favorite fruit in America, and is continually advancing in public taste.

There is a market in Kingston, Jamaica, every day, but Tuesdays and Saturday are the busy days.

The Gordon Town road, from a very early hour, presents a curious sight, with the native villagers coming into town to sell their produce. They bring innumerable baskets, full of yams, bananas, peppers, beans, and home-made cakes, piled up one on top of the other, each basket on a woman's head.

They come a great distance, many of them twenty or twenty-five miles, and return the same day or night, most of them preferring to do the walk home at night, when it is cool. One cannot go far in the West Indies without seeing a rum shop, bread is also to be bought at the same shop. I have no doubt that the poor donkeys, which, I think, are badly used, are very glad of the rest.—Correspondent.

Have You Any Idea What It Costs

TO MAKE A CHICAGO DAILY NEWS?

You haven't? Well, let us give you just a glimpse into the business, perhaps it will interest you.

To begin with, the work of the paper is divided into Seventeen Different Departments, each under its own responsible Superintendent. Let us take them in order as they stand on the weekly pay-roll:—

1. The Editorial Department.—This includes managing editors, city editors, telegraph editors, exchange editors, editorial writers, special writers, and about thirty reporters. THE DAILY NEWS staff is admittedly without a superior in the West, and numbers 56
2. The Telegraph Room.—To save time special wires are run into THE DAILY NEWS building, and the paper's own operators take the messages and hand them immediately to the telegraph editor. The number of operators is 3
3. The Compositor's Room.—When "copy" has passed the hands of the proper revising editor it goes to the type-setter. There are a good many of him in THE DAILY NEWS office—on an average . . . 73
4. The Linotype Room.—But the compositor doesn't do all the type-setting. The "Linotype" machine "sets type" by casting a line-of-type, on somewhat the same principle as the type-founder casts a single type. Fourteen of these machines are in use in THE DAILY NEWS office, and the number of persons required in this department is 29
5. The Artists' and Engravers' Department.—But the metropolitan daily now gives its readers not only reading matter, but also illustrations. By the aid of good artists, zinc etchers and photography by electric light THE DAILY NEWS is now printing the best newspaper illustrations in America. This takes the best service of skilled workers to the number of 7
6. The Stereotype Foundry.—The matter—type and pictures—being now "locked up" in the "forms" the work is next transferred to the foundry. A metropolitan daily no longer prints from its type. In order to print a large edition quickly it is necessary to multiply the printing surfaces, and this is accomplished by casting duplicate stereotyped plates, from which, after they have been fastened to the presses, the printing is done. Of stereotypers THE DAILY NEWS requires 8
7. The Press Room.—THE DAILY NEWS uses six double perfecting presses, capable of printing 100,000 complete papers per hour. To run these there are required men to the number of 26
8. The Mailing and Delivery Department.—"The mailers" and the delivery clerks handle over a million papers a week. The force numbers 23
9. The Engine Room.—To supply the motive power requires three steam boilers of 175 horse-power capacity, and three engines with an aggregate of 270 horse-power. All departments are lighted by the Edison incandescent system, which here comprises three dynamo machines and 500 lamps. The employes of this department number 5
10. The Circulation Department.—The paper is now a manufactured article, and it is the business of this department to develop the market for it. The average number of workers is 16
11. The Subscription Room.—All the subscriptions from out-of-town, whether of individual readers or wholesale news agents, pass through this department, and this department employs on the average . . . 17
12. The Business Office.—The general clerical work of the paper, such as receiving and caring for the advertisements—of which over fifteen hundred are received and handled every day—receiving and paying out cash, the general bookkeeping of the business, requires a counting-room force of 27
13. The Care of Building requires the constant service of three janitors 3
14. The Watchman.—To insure perfect protection against risk of fire two watchmen are constantly on duty. 2
15. The New York Office.—This engages the entire time of a general manager and assistant 2
16. The Washington Bureau.—In charge of its own special Washington staff correspondent 1
17. The Milwaukee Bureau.—To facilitate Northwestern news gathering, one man 1

From which it appears that the number of regular employees is 302

And the pay roll runs from $5,500 to $6,000 per week, aggregating during the year $300,000.

Then there is even a larger annual expenditure for white paper, and telegraph and cable tolls sometimes run nearly a thousand dollars a week. Take it all together the expenditures of THE DAILY NEWS for the year 1888 will vary very little from $900,000.

The foregoing takes no account of the special correspondents at hundreds of places throughout the country; of European correspondents; of fifteen hundred news agents throughout the Northwest who distribute THE DAILY NEWS to its out of town readers; of two hundred city carriers; of forty-two wholesale city dealers with their horses and wagons; of one hundred and fifty branch advertisement offices throughout the city, all connected with the main office by telephone, nor of the about three thousand newsboys who make a living, in whole or in part, selling THE DAILY NEWS in Chicago. This is what it costs the publisher to make a CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. It costs the reader to buy it one cent a day. Measured by the cost of its production, THE DAILY NEWS is worth its price, isn't it? The Chicago Daily News is sold by all newsdealers, or will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The September Wide Awake opens with a jolly story of the Harrison campaign of 1840; it is by Mrs. F. A. Humphrey, a personal reminiscence, entitled "Two Conspirators," and illustrated by Smedley. Another, seasonable story, and amusing, is "New's Base-Ball Club" by Mary C. Crowley. Still another, delicious in its fun, is "Jermicky's Sacrifice," by Mrs. Katharine B. Foot. "A Little Lombard Hero" is a touching Italian story by Edmond de Amicis, translated by a little friend of his, Miss Marcia Thomas of the American consul at Turin. There is a brace of suggestive stories Mrs. Margaret Storer Warner, entitled "Two Opportunities," showing girls and boys who live at the summer resorts how they can earn some money.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Is not Britton a Prohibition town? Here is a fact, the only political flag that waves in our village is for Fisk and Brooks.

Will Osgood is on the sick list.

Mr. Richard Adams and wife returned last week from quite an extended visit in Kentucky. On their return they took in the Exposition at Cincinnati.

The parties who owned the buildings that were recently destroyed here by fire have received their insurance money and are preparing to rebuild at once and to build this time with brick.

Mr. Beasley we learn has already let his contract for a brick block.

Mrs. Scott has bought a lot on Main street and has commenced to build herself a nice residence, just north of Osborne street. A strong force of workmen are proceeding rapidly with the work.

Rev. Mr. Wright and wife have returned from their visit in Canada, now fresh and strong for his pulpit labors.

It is understood that the Britton Cornet Band will attend the County Fair on Friday of this week.

Walter Thomas Mills is advertised to speak here on Oct. 4th at 3 P. M., in the interests of temperance and prohibition. A short man, but a very tall speaker. He has been heard here before and the announcement of his name for a public speech is enough to draw together a large crowd. We are informed that a Fisk and Brooks pole will go up, on that same day, in Britton village.

MACON MUSIC.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson of Bay City, after taking in the State Fair, made a two days visit here with friends.

Mrs. Smith of Ann Arbor is spending a week at Will Morgan's.

Mrs. Edith Triplet has returned to Tecumseh after making a two weeks visit among friends.

Dr. Woodard of Tecumseh amputated a limb for Mr. Austin on Wednesday last. Mr. Austin is doing as well as could be expected.

Rev. J. A. DeSpelder of Orange City will occuy the pulpit at the Reformed church Sunday morning next, Sept. 30th.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Editor Stacy was in the village Tuesday.

Rev. W. H. Benton is getting ready to move to his new appointment at Royal Oak. He filled the pulpit there last Sunday.

Rev. Millard preached here in the morning and Rev. Peter Sharp in the evening. The new pastor was detained by sickness and could not fill his appointment.

Remember Walter Thomas Mills will speak at Britton next week Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock P. M. Pole raising at 2 o'clock P. M. The South East Raisin glee club will furnish some fine music for the occasion.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the home of Mrs. John Arner, on South street, next Tuesday afternoon. A cordial invitation to all.

In last weeks issue it was announced that the Old Folk's concert would be repeated on the evening of October 5th. Owing to the inconvenience of some who take part, the time was changed to Oct. 3d., or next week Wednesday. The program is being revised some and everything promises a good entertainment. The admission has been changed to 10 and 15cts.

Mrs. Jacob Arner left Monday for a few days visit at Augusta with her son George and family.

W. B. Linn visited his wife at Inkster, the fore part of the week. She is spending a few weeks with her parents.

Lost, between Ridgeway and Chas. Foote's, a striped shawl. The finder will be rewarded by leaving the same at the post office.

Two more Fisk and Brooks banners float to the breeze in our village.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Pocklington went to Perrysburgh Monday to attend the funeral of her Mother, Mrs. Israel Thornton, who died quite suddenly.

There was a fine attendance at the the Prohibition pole raising Saturday. Addresses were made by A. P. Coddington and Rev. Millard and a very interesting address by Joseph P. McCarthy. The South East Raisin glee club furnished some fine glees for the occasion and everything was a grand success. The pole stands 100 feet with a Fisk and Brooks banner floating at the top.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE.

The apothegm "speak nothing save good of the dead" has given rise to the epigram—false as an epitaph. It is easy for a friend to pronounce an eulogy on a bad man. The mantle of charity covers all that is ill and leaves affection free to create or portray an ideal which tradition fortified by friendship can only partially justify.

The rustic artist may carve the softer marbles with attractive forms, or paint the faces of its sections with suggestive scenes, but the harder granites admit of no such freedom of treatment.

It is so of character, some men attain prominence by accident, some by effort and some grow into it naturally, as they mature in years. Of the latter class was the man of whom I write.

It was not his fortune to figure in the great combinations that attract the admiration of the giddy world. There was nothing startling in his career at least, to the outside world; what he achieved he had done quietly. Of strong frame and perfect health, he was well fitted for the many efforts that he had to make when coming in the wilderness of this his adopted State.

He was a gentleman; his differences were never intensified by hate or his opposition reinforced by malice. He was born seventy-seven years ago. Not much of a space in a geological epoch or in the span of History, but long enough to permit him to develop, and become and remain a man. There was nothing unusual in his youth. There was nothing but what he shared in common with thousands of others in his early manhood. His was a steady moral growth from the cradle to the grave. He filled many positions of dignity and trust, and was never found wanting. He was a farmer of elegant leisure. He was no politician; though a man of strong convictions his political life will bear the measurement of the severest code of morals. He was a friend, and those coming in contact with him needed no assurance that he was true. He was a husband, and in the Ridgeway cemetery, under the spreading branches of that majestic oak, a silent widow sheds unavailing tears above the grave of a companion, regretful, chaste, and affectionate. He was a father, and five sons grown to manhood in our midst love. He was a religious man, not in a sectarian sense, but he had the convictions which are the bases of all religions. He believed in the great law of compensation, which at last makes all things equal.

Such was Samuel Rapplye, as I remember him from my boyhood, who died at his home in Ridgeway, on the 10th day of September 1888. I have not intended to over estimate his virtues. I shall

"No farther seek his merits to disclose,

A TERRIBLE TROPICAL SNAKE.

Graphic Description of a Creature Whose Power To Destroy Is Awful.

There are eight varieties of him (the fer-de-lance), the most common being the gray speckled with black, precisely the color that enables the monster to hide himself among the roots of the tree by simply coiling about them and concealing his triangular head.

Sometimes he is a beautiful flower yellow; then he may never be distinguished from the bunch of bright bananas among which he hangs coiled, or he may be a dark yellow, or a yellowish brown, or the color of wine lees speckled with pink and black, or a perfect ash tint, or black with a yellowish belly, or black with a rose belly—all hues of tropical mould, of old bark, of putrefying trees, of forest detritus.

And the fer-de-lance reigns absolute king over the mountains and the ravines; he is lord of the forests and the solitudes by day, and by night he extends his dominion over the public roads, the familiar paths, the parks, the pleasure resorts.

People must remain at home after dark unless they dwell in the city itself: if you happen to be out visiting after sunset, only a mile from town, your friends will caution you anxiously not to follow the boulevard as you go back, and to keep as closely as possible to the very centre of the path.

Even in the brightest moon you cannot venture to enter the woods unescorted; you cannot trust your eyes to detect danger; at any moment a seeming branch, a knot of lianas, a pink or gray root, a clump of pendent yellow fruit, may suddenly take life, writhe, swell, scratch, spring, strike.

Then you will need aid indeed, and most quickly; for within the space of a few heart-beats the stricken flesh chills, tumefies, softens, changes color, spots violaceously, and an icy coldness crawls through all the blood. If the physician or the pauscur arrives in time, and no artery or vein has been directly pierced, there is hope, but the danger is not passed when the life has been saved.

Necrosis of the tissues begin; the flesh corrupts, tatters, tumbles from the bone, and the colors of its putrefaction are frightful mockeries of the hues of vegetable death, of forest decomposition, the ghastly pinks and grays and yellows of rotting trunks and roots melting back into the thick fetid clay that gave them birth. You moulder as the trees moulder; you crumble and dissolve as dissolves the substance of the balatas and the palms and the acomats; the Death-of-the-Woods has seized upon you!

And this pestilence that walketh in darkness, this destruction that wasteth at noonday, may not be exorcised. Each female produces viviparously from 40 to 60 young at a birth. The haunts of the creature are in many cases inaccessible, inexplorable; its multiplication is prodigious; it is only the surplus of its swarming that overpours into the cane fields, and makes the high road perilous after sunset, yet to destroy three or four hundred thanatophidia on a single small plantation during the lapse of 12 months has not been uncommon.

The introduction of the mangnouste (the ichneumon) may, it is hoped, do much toward protecting the workers in the cane fields and on the cocoa and coffee plantations, but the mangnouste's powers are limited, and the ocean of death is illimitable.—Harper's Magazine.

SUNDAY WORK IN GERMANY.

Its Results Do Not Favor Keeping People Busy Seven Days a Week.

The extent to which Sunday labor is carried on in Germany, as shown in a report of the United States consul at Leipsic, will probably surprise even those who have hitherto observed the tendency in this direction.

In the Prussian districts, from which the fullest returns were obtained, it appears that of 506,156 establishments, employing 1,582,591 hands, 288,931 establishments are kept open on Sundays, and 668,027 of the hands are employed on that day, the percentage of establishments kept open being 57.75, and the percentage of employes working on Sunday 42.25. In trade and transportation the report shows that 77 per cent. of the establishments are kept open and 57 per cent. of the hands employed.

It would, of course, be interesting to know what correspondence there has been between seven-day labor and the production and trade of the empire for a series of years.

The attempt to dispense with one day of rest in every seven days has often been made in the past, but never with success, although a temporary advantage has been gained in increased production. Inferior workmanship, however, has been sure to follow, and it is doubtful if Germany's experiment in the face of the experience of the world will ultimately succeed.

COMFORT ONE ANOTHER.

Comfort one another,
[illegible] weary dreary,
[illegible] weary.
And [illegible]
[illegible] heart-bearing,
When the [illegible] are caring,
[illegible] we were glad.

Comfort one another:
With the language close and tender,
With the sweetness love can render,
And looks of friendly eyes.
Do not wait with grace unspoken,
While life's daily bread is broken;
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies.

Comfort one another:
There are words of music ringing
Down the ages sweet as singing
Of the happy choirs above.
Ransomed saint and mighty angel,
Lift the grand, deep-toned evangel,
Where forever they are praising the eternal love.

Comfort one another:
By the hope of Him who sought us
In our peril—Him who bought us,
Paying with His precious blood.
By the faith that will not alter,
Trusting strength that will not falter,
Leaning on the One Divinely good.

Comfort one another:
Let the grave-gloom lie beyond you
While the spirit's words remind you
Of the home beyond the tomb;
Where no more is pain or parting,
Fever's flush to tear-drop starting,
But the presence of the Lord, and for all people room. —Independent.

"TOO THIN."

The Expression not Necessarily Slangy—Good Authority for Its Use.

Though the phrase "too thin" as ordinarily used by school boys and others, may now be styled vulgar, the words may be used in a perfectly orthodox manner.

"Thin" is equivalent to "transparent," easily seen through; and, as a metaphor, seems to involve the idea of a veil (such as the ancients call rentus textilis, or "woven wind") which served to display as much as to conceal the person.

It is in this sense evidently that Shakespeare used the words in "King Henry VIII," act V., s. 2, where the King says:

"You were ever good at sudden commendations,
Bishop Winchester. But know I come not
To hear such flattery now; and in my presence
They are too thin and bare to hide offenses."

That is "your commendations are too transparent to hide your offenses."

Another instance of the use of the words may be found in Smollett's novel of "Peregrine Pickle," published in 1751.

When the hero suddenly informs his lady-love, Amelia, that he is going abroad, the tears gushed into her eyes, and she was at great pains to conceal the cause of her grief by observing that the tea was so scalding hot as to make her eyes water.

"This pretext," says Smollet, "was too thin to impose on her lover, or to deceive the observation of her friend Sophy."

There is nothing vulgar in saying that a pretext is "too thin," and this is what is meant by the modern elliptical phrase.

GOOD MANNERS.

Some Golden Rules Worth Memorizing.

Never try to outshine, but to please.

Never press a favor where it seems undesired.

Never intrude ill-health, pains, losses or misfortunes.

Never unavoidably wound the feelings of a human being.

Never talk or laugh aloud in public places or upon the street.

Never forget that vulgarity has its origin in ignorance or selfishness.

Never urge another to do anything against his desire unless you see danger before him.

Do not ask another to do what you would not be glad to do under similar circumstances.

Never omit to perform a kind act when it can be done with any reasonable amount of exertion.

Never needlessly wound the vanity of another or dilate unnecessarily upon disagreeable subjects.

Do not make witticism at the expense of others which you would not wish to have made upon yourselves.

Remember that good manners are thoughts filled with kindness and refinement and then translated into behaviour.

Be not ostentatious in dress or deportment; nothing can be more vulgar. See that costumes fit the time and occasion.

Be rude to none; rudeness harms not only the humblest and poorest to whom it is directed, but it injures the exhibitors.

Never treat superiors with servility or inferiors with arrogance. Speak as kindly to a day laborer as to one occupying a high position.

Always give precedence to elders, visitors and superiors. Offer them the best seat at the table, the best place by the fire and the first of everything. Go farther than mere form and see that they are comfortable and happy.

SINGULAR CURE OF RHEUMATISM.

A New Use for the Mexican Hairless Dog.

Dr. Price, of Oconee county, Georgia, suffered for years the pangs of rheumatism, vainly trying all remedies.

Six years ago one of his sons in Texas heard that a hairless Mexican dog, if allowed to sleep at the feet of the sufferer from rheumatism, was a sure cure.

He bought a dog and took it home to his father. The old gentleman laughed at the idea of such a cure, but to please his son tried the dog.

The account says that as the doctor lay down in bed the dog sprang in and coiled itself around his feet. In less than an hour the dog gave him evident relief, and in a short time effected a cure.

Wherever the pain struck him he made the dog lie against the place, and the heat from the animal's body drew it out like a mustard plaster.

Every night for six years the Doctor has slept with his hairless bedfellow, who now begins to show the effects of age, and Dr. Price says that after his death, if the rheumatic pains return, he will at once send off for another Mexican dog.

HIGH TARIFF ROBBERY.

James G. Blaine declared in 1884 that in 20 years the Nation had gained in wealth $30,000,000,000. That was a sum equal to $600 to every man, woman and child in the nation, or $3,000 to the average family of five people.

That was true. Who got the money? Let us see.

In 1860 the wealth in the nine manufacturing States was $529 per capita, and in the agricultural States it was $507 per capita. In 1880, after 20 years of high protective tariff, the wealth in the manufacturing States has increased to $1,653 per capita, while in the agricultural States it was only $473. This is not all. The ten North western States, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, are mortgaged to the enormous amount of $2,425,000,000. This frightful indebtedness is almost all practically owed to the manufacturing States, and it reduces the valuation of ten North western States by $198 per capita, and increases that of the manufacturing States by $320 per capita.

Making these corrections the North west has a valuation of $475 per capita and the manufacturing States have $1,079 per capita. Thus in 20 years of high protection the matchless North west has absolutely lost $32 per capita in wealth, while sterile New England has gained $1,152 per capita.

Thus the 30,000,000,000 of wealth which Mr. Blaine boasted had been accumulated in this country between 1860 and 1880, amounting to 600 per capita, has been all absorbed by the manufacturing States. In 1860 they had $529 per capita and in 1880 they had $1,079 per capita, while the Northwest in 1860 had $507 per capita, and in 1880 they had $475 per capita. The cause of this astounding condition of things is the high protective tariff. It has robbed the people of the rich Northwest and kept them poor and mortage ridden. At the same time it has enriched the people of New England.

Mr. J. S. Moore, the celebrated "Parson merchant," estimated that the tariff compels the people of this country to pay tribute to the manufacturers to the enormous amount of $[illegible] per annum. That is also $[illegible] per capita per annum. The amount that Michigan has to pay is over $[illegible].

This is an enormous sum of money to force from the people of this state every year. It is over $[illegible] for each congressional district. For an average county, like Ingham, for instance, it is over $[illegible] every year. It amounts to $100 every year to the average family of five people. It is an enormous drain. No people on earth can stand this system of robbery and escape bankruptcy. This system of robbery kept up for twenty five years has made the Northwest poor by plastering it with mortgages, while it has made the manufacturing States enormously rich. No wonder they want to keep up the same system. But is it possible that the Northwest will longer submit to this tariff robbery, the very worst that ever was perpetrated under the sun? Under this misnamed protective system the East has robbed the West of more than two and a half times the entire cost to both sides of the late war of the rebellion. How long do the farmers want to continue paying this tribute?—Saginaw Courier.

The following extract from a letter to the Truth Seeker gives some figures which are not quite as large as those of the ordinary statistics, but which may mean more to the average citizen.

"I am a photographer; have worked at that business 11½ years. Last fall I purchased a bill of 5,000 cabinet mounts of a Philadelphia manufacturer at $12 per thousand. This spring through an importer I purchased 5,000 of the same grade of cards from a German manufacturer. The bills were the same; were the goods same? Yes, to all outside appearances, but when torn apart the home manufactured card was of a coarse, unfinished pulp, while the imported one was of fine fiber and compactly pressed. Now, I paid $27 import duty on the German cards and $32 for the 5,000 cards, making $60. I did not pay any import duty on the Philadelphia card stock, but I paid $60 for them all the same.

"I have a lens that cost $125, the duty on which was $56.25. I have another lens that cost $50, the duty being $27. I have still another lens that cost $25, the duty being $11.25. During the last fiscal year I have purchased four reams of photographic paper, the duty on which was $57.60; thirty-one boxes of glass (at $4 per box) $124, duty 75 per cent.

"I state further that I have footed up the cost to myself of the tariff per year at $900. No government on the face of the earth would dare levy a direct tax on a business of about $4,000 per annum to that amount. My entire property would not bring under the hammer $2,000; yet I am compelled to pay yearly almost half what I am worth to support the most damnable system of robbery the world has ever known. Nine years since (1879) I purchased the property on which I now live and gave a mortgage of $800 on it. To-day I still owe $700, not having been able to pay a dollar except the interest, for eight years.

"Now, I and my workmen earn this $900. Has any one on the face of the earth a right to deprive me of it? Has any government, autocrat or power of whatsoever nature, the moral right to force me to contribute to their personal aggrandizement to my personal discomfiture and loss?"

TERSE TARIFF TALKS.

After seven months of persistent campaigning against the tariff, the house for unseating Hewitt by tariff agitation, the opposition leaders seem to be fully convinced that they must begin tariff agitation by preparing a tariff revision and reform bill for the house and pass it in the senate.

Will they prepare and pass a bill in the interest of country or party? They vociferate tariff agitation before forcing the necessity for tariff revision. Will they revise our tariff laws to promote industry or to promote party?

When James G. Blaine was speaker of the house he favored free coal, free salt and free lumber, and aided in passing bills through the republican house making these articles free. Are not free coal, free lumber and free salt even more important now than they were then?

Senator Hale was the leader of the house in passing bills for free coal, free lumber and free salt, when tariff revision was treated as a business and not a partizan question.

Senator Hawley supported and voted for free coal and other free raw materials only a few years ago, when there were no supreme political necessities to control tariff legislation.

In 1870, when the tariff duties were 47.08 per cent, or less than they are now 47.10, Senator Sherman denounced our tariff duties as "unexampled in our country and higher by nearly 50 per cent. than they were in 1861," and he protested against them as endangering the whole protective system.

Senator Allison, who is a leading spirit in framing the new senate bill, favored free coal, free lumber and free salt when political leaders did not dictate tariff legislation, and he declared for tariff reform, "so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect a tariff as the country ever had."

Three republican presidents—Grant, Garfield and Arthur—and two republican secretaries of the treasury have officially urged free raw materials to enlarge employment for our labor and enlarge markets for their products.

With these pointed tributes to the chief features of the house tariff bill from the leaders of the republicans, will they deal honestly with labor and repeal or reduce taxes on the necessaries of business and life?—or will they continue protection to monopoly combines and trusts, with high taxes and low wages for labor, and free trade in cheap pauper labor and in whiskey?

THE RIGHT MAN IN THE RIGHT PLACE.

Mr. Burt is making his mark in the state campaign in the precise way that was expected when he was nominated. He was chosen to lead the democratic ticket because of his marked executive and business ability, and the familiarity he displays with the state affairs, and especially with its mismanagement under republican administration, shows that there was no mistake made in selecting him. He is after G. V. Lee, with a whole bundle of sharp sticks, and the uneasiness of the governor's supporters shows that the prodding has taken effect.

As candidate for Governor, Mr. Burt is the right man in the place, and he will be still more emphatically the right man in the right place when he ceases to be candidate and becomes Governor. The people of Michigan want just such a thorough business like administration of their state affairs as he will give them. And they are going to have it. The Finertys and other Republican orators who declare that Michigan is "doubtful" are mighty near right. It is so doubtful that there is no longer much doubt about it. The tax payers know the value of a man like Burt in the Executive chair, and they are not going to let the opportunity slip of putting him there.—Detroit Free Press.

THE HOME MARKET HUMBUG

The high taxers are administering home market talk to the farmers in big doses. One dose of it they administer in their platform, wherein they say "would effect all needed reduction of the national revenue by such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people."

They seem to mean to have the farmer understand by this that they would give him the home market to himself by keeping out foreign products. Now let the farmer consider a few facts before he swallows this. With the exception of tea, coffee, sugar, and some articles which our farmers do not produce at all, or only in small quantities our imports are not farm products to any considerable extent.

The farmer, therefore, has the home market pretty much to himself now. But he furnishes more than seventy per cent. of all our exports. In the census year the total value of our farm products was $2,213,402,504. Of this total $546,176,704, or nearly 25 per cent., was exported. This surplus above the home demand was nearly 32 per cent. of his total product.

Now, if he had been confined to the home market, what would he have got for his extra 25 per cent that the home market didn't want? And how would the value of his total product have been affected if he had glutted the home market with a surplus of 25 per cent. above the demand? And as he thus discourages about one-quarter his product, he may ponder for himself about how much his home market would have to be enlarged in order to absorb his 25 per cent. surplus at remunerative prices. He would do well to ponder such facts as these before swallowing the "magnificent" talk he hears about the home market.—Chicago Times.

LABOR AND PROTECTION.

Below we append a table showing the price of labor in several of the more prominent trades in low tariff England and high tariff Germany, as compiled from the consular reports. For convenience of comparison we have reduced wages to the price per hour in the respective countries. This was necessary. Neither wages per day nor per week would give any data for comparison as in Germany all classes of wage workers are employed from sixty to seventy hours a week, while in England from fifty hours to fifty-four hours constitute a week's work. It is not necessary for us to add any argument to these figures for they tell their story with sufficient force and clearness to satisfy the most skeptical. The wage workers of America can here see what would be their condition if population was as dense here as in Germany, and if the great plains of the west did not annually absorb the surplus population from the older states.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

C. A. Wright & Co.

No newspaper man in the country is able to write more intelligently about newspapers than Z. L. White, whose initials so long gave weight to the Washington dispatches of the New York Tribune; and more than usual interest, therefore, attaches to his article on "Western Journalism," which appears in Harper's Magazine for October. It is not only a history, caricature sketch of the principal journals of the West and their editors, but it is a summary of their reputations and a fair estimate of their influence, political, moral and literary. Portraits are given of twenty-seven of the leading editors of the West, showing a set of men of marked energy, intelligence and ability.

LOG CABINS were not hot-houses and the people who dwelt in them were the hot-house growths. They were a hardy healthy generation and the remedies used were simple preparations reproduced in Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy and Warner's "Tippecanoe" the great stomach tonic.

LOG CABINS, dancing girls, were yet common in the houses. Health and happiness were found in them. The best of the proprietary remedies used are now to be found in Warner's Log Cabin Remedies made by Warner of Safe Cure fame. Remember the regular—with Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla.

An Offset Claim.

A hired man who has been employed on a farm in this county entered suit against his employer the other day for the balance of his wages, amounting, as he claimed, to $32.

It looked at first as if the plaintiff had a clear case. He gave dates and figures in a straightforward way. When the farmer took the stand he said:

"I claim an offset for that $32, for I honestly owe it."

"What is your offset?" said the lawyer.

"He is an unbeliever."

"In what?"

"Why, in the Bible."

"What has that got to do with your justly owing the $32?"

"It had a heap to do with it. I had six hands on my employ, and we were hurried when I hired this man.

"He had not been with us two days when he stopped the reaper in the middle of the forenoon to dispute about Daniel in the lions' den, and in three days we had a knockdown on the whale swallowing Jonah. The man who runs the mower got to arguing about Samson, and drove over a stump and damaged the machine to the extent of $32. The next day my boy broke his leg while climbing the fence to listen to the row I was going on over the children of Israel going thro' the Red Sea. Worst of all, my wife said she didn't believe Elijah was fed by the ravens, and, hang it all, I found myself weakening over Noah and the flood.

"That is my offset, sir, and if he was worth anything I'd sue him for $1,000 besides."—Farmer's Magazine.

I have been afflicted with hay fever from early in August until frost. My eyes would run a stream of water and I sneezed continually. I was advised to use Ely's Cream Balm. It has worked like a charm and I can say I am entirely cured.—Mrs. Emeline Johnson, Chester, Conn.

I have been for several years a sufferer from hay fever and severe head colds. I have found nothing that can compare with Ely's Cream Balm. I would not be without it for any consideration. It is simply wonderful in its effect upon the nasal organs.—S. A. Burtt, Wilmington, N. C.

The September Wide Awake opens with a jolly story of the Harrison campaign of 1840, it is by Mrs. F. A. Humphrey, a personal reminiscence, entitled "Two Conspirators," and illustrated by Smedley. Another seasonable story, and amusing, is "Ned's Base Ball Club" by Mary C. Crowley. Still another, delicious in its fun, is "Jerusicky's Sacrifice," by Mrs. Katharine B. Foot. "A Little Lion Hero" is a touching Italian story by Edmond de Amicis, translated by a little friend of his, Miss Marcia Thomas of the American consul at Turin.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.

My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plaster, which you so strongly recommended her to try for inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In an hour after of the pain we wound the Plaster about her knees, and, as a result the swelling was reduced, she became quiet and rested. The syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plaster are remedies of great merit.

NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Summarized Statement of What the National Law-Makers Are Doing—Record of the Bills and Resolutions Introduced in Both Branches of Congress During the Past Week.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 19.—The deficiency appropriation bill was reported to the senate yesterday. Sherman made a long speech on the proposed retaliation bill, opposing it, as the president had not used the retaliatory powers he now has. He favored the annexation of Canada as soon as it could be brought about. The department of agriculture bill was debated, but no action taken and after a short executive session the senate adjourned.

In the house, a communication was received from the postmaster general declaring that there has been no illegal mailing of The Tariff Reform Advocate at Columbus, O., nor anywhere else, and that no investigation was required. Barnes introduced a bill offering a reward of $100,000 for the discovery of the true cause, prevention, destruction or material modification of yellow fever. The sundry civil bill came up and Cannon of Illinois made an extended political speech, in which he favored the purchase of bonds with the surplus. Payson opposed the adoption of the conference report on the sundry civil bill, basing his objections on the clause for a public library, which he said would cost on present plans $15,000,000, instead of the $3,262,000 originally estimated. The bill went over. A bill was reported authorizing the war office to prescribe rules, etc., for the care and management of the St. Clair Flats canal, and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 20.—Edmunds reported to the senate yesterday an order of the foreign relations committee directing the presiding officer to withhold the Chinese bill from the house until further directions. He wanted immediate consideration, but Teller objected. A resolution was passed appropriating $100,000 to be used exclusively for relief of yellow fever sufferers, and not for quarantine. Jones of Arkansas spoke at length on the tariff, declaring it a system of naked robbery, and Stewart replied declaring the demonetization of silver the cause of all the trouble. Bills were passed: Appropriating $750,000 for a public building at St. Paul; granting Duluth & Winnipeg railway right-of-way through Fon du Lac Indian reservation in Minnesota; forfeiting lands granted Michigan to aid the Ontonagon & Marquette railway; appropriating $75,000 for a public building at Kalamazoo, Mich. The senate then adjourned.

The house spent the whole day debating the public library clause in the sundry civil bill, and when a vote was taken on the conference report to agree or not to agree, it stood yeas, 68; nays, 67—no quorum—and the house at 2:55 adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 21.—A bill was reported to the senate yesterday to amend the act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians in Wisconsin. Edmunds, for the reason that the Chinese exclusion bill had passed out of control of the senate, moved to lay on the table the resolution directing that the bill be withheld; agreed to. Mitchell made a long speech against the Mills tariff bill. The senate then held a short secret session, after which the bill to create an executive department of agriculture was taken up, and it was agreed to vote to-day at 3 p. m. on the proposition to transfer the weather bureau to the proposed new department. The senate then adjourned.

The house refused to agree to the conference report on the sundry civil bill—32 to 47—and a further conference was ordered. A bill was reported suspending the timber culture, pre-emption and desert land laws until action is taken on pending legislation on those subjects. Morrow offered as a question of privilege a resolution directing the enrolled bills committee to immediately transmit the Chinese exclusion bill to the president. Declared no question of privilege by the chair. The house, at 3:15 adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 22.—Stewart introduced a bill in the senate yesterday providing that bills which have passed both houses shall be immediately transmitted to the president; also a resolution requesting the house to require its officers to so transmit bills. To the latter Edmunds objected. The clause in the house bill providing for an executive department of agriculture which transfers the weather bureau to the new department was rejected, and the bill passed. The conference report on the sundry civil bill was agreed to, and a motion adopted to drop the library clause entirely from the bill in case of further disagreement. The senate then adjourned until Monday.

In the house, Kilgore, by objecting, prevented the passage of the senate bill appropriating $100,000 to aid the yellow fever sufferers. The senate bill forfeiting the Marquette & Ontonagon land grant was amended, limiting the forfeiture to lands along the unconstructed part of the road, and extending it to lands granted to the line from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin state line, and then passed. Hopkins of New York objected to unanimous consent to consider the bill providing for the suppression of trusts. The bill to suspend the pre-emption, timber culture and desert land laws was amended by striking out the suspension part and leaving the provisions that railroad claimants shall not secure any better claim to lands nor the right of the United States to forfeit be in any way diminished during the pendency of the forfeiture legislation. The bill was passed. Several private bills were then passed, and recess taken to 8 p. m., at which time the Mrs. Sheridan pension bill came up, but Cheadle of Indiana objected. It was then proposed to make the bill special order for Dec. 6, but Kilgore of Texas objected. Thirty-two private pension bills were passed and the house, at 12:35, adjourned till Monday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 23.—A bill was reported to the senate yesterday allowing any person (not only veterans) who has relinquished a homestead entry to make another one, provided he is not a speculator. Plumb spoke in favor of forfeiting certain land granted the Northern Pacific railway. Ten thousand dollars was appropriated for a monument to commemorate the surrender of Burgoyne. The general deficiency bill was taken up and an amendment agreed to inserting each of the items contained in the book of estimates which had been omitted from the bill except those for the Pacific railway companies. Other amendments appropriated $250,000 for indemnity to persecuted Chinese, provided for two additional associate justices for the Dakota supreme court, appropriated $25,000 for the annual leaves of absence of employes in the government printing office, and extended the criminal laws over the public land strip. The bill was then passed. Stewart introduced a sweeping measure of Chinese exclusion requiring the abrogation of all treaty obligations permitting the immigration of Chinese laborers. A bill was introduced to appoint a commission of seven physicians of different schools to go south and investigate the yellow fever. Plumb introduced a bill to pay a reward of $100,000 to the proprietor of the copyrighted remedy that cures 281 out of 1,000 yellow fever patients. The senate then adjourned.

The house passed a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi at LaCrosse, Wis. Other bills off red were: To establish yellow fever refuges ships at proper points in the south and equip the same; to prevent aliens being employed on public works. A joint resolution extending the existing appropriations for sundry civil expenses to Oct. 15 was adopted. Sayres of Texas made a speech defending the administration from the charge of extravagance, and even the blame on the senate. Further conference was ordered on the public library clause in the sundry civil bill, the rest of the report being agreed to. Holman asked immediate consideration of a bill to extend the criminal laws over the public land strip, but the friends of the Oklahoma bill notified him that a quorum would be insisted upon. McMillin of Tennessee objected to a proposition to fix a day to consider the Blair educational bill, and the house adjourned.

The Jones County Calf Case Ended.

WATERLOO, Iowa, Sept. 24.—The jury in the celebrated Jones county calf case after being out forty-eight hours returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,000. Robert Johnson, the plaintiff, says this will end the case, which has been in the courts for twenty years and has cost thousands of dollars. Five calves, said to have been stolen from various herds and worth about $1 each, were found among Johnson's cattle. Johnson was charged with theft and was acquitted after several trials, since which time he has continued to sue his accusers for false prosecution.

China Rejects the Treaty.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 22.—The president has received official information of the refusal of the Chinese government to ratify the amended treaty. Secretary Bayard, in an interview with a representative of the United Press, when asked about the rejection of the Chinese treaty by that government, said the information was received at the state department in a dispatch from Minister Denby, in which he simply stated that the Chinese government had refused to ratify the amended treaty.

Robert Garrett Said To Be Dying.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—The friends of Robert Garrett were much startled Friday at a rumor that he was dying. The rumor gained ground rapidly, and before night many thought he was really dead. At any rate, he is an ill man, and his death, it is said, is only a matter of a few days. He is suffering from paresis, and each week finds him less able to retard the ravages of the disease. Six attendants watch the patient all the time.

A BACHELOR'S SECRET

I keep one precious bit of gold,
Safe hidden like a miser;
And yet it grows no heavier for it,
He'd never know my worldly wealth,
And none would be the wiser.

Why do I hoard this bit of gold
Never given away?
My friend, I cherish it as a talisman,
I love some words are warm and bold;
Let's have it in the energy

The bit I keep is no common metal
From all beneath the sun;
Of gold—all gold is alike, I hear, friends,
This curl I keep, and I look at it
And now you know the story.

"Why prize it so?" I think maybe
Half my life I search vainly expected,
All the rest, a miser be poor,
Save to compel what I seek—ah, me!
When all the rest is buried.

One bit he saves, to toil and sew
As I pick the fleecy
Sweetness of wool; I have of these
This, and a lifelong memory
Of love that never was spoken.

Through weary years my bit of gold
I've hoarded like a miser;
Friend, when my hearts grows tired and cold,
This curl lay in my dying hold
And none will be the wiser.

FOR AND AGAINST SMOKING.

Something To Be Said on Both Sides—Startling Advice to Women Past Their Bloom.

There are some things that may be considered as established against the smoke habit. It is expensive. Not as expensive as it used to be, for a man can get a cigar that is not altogether rank for about one-half the former price of a fair cigar. If the smoker will use a pipe, the expense is not considerable.

The smoke habit is offensive to many who do not smoke, which is a strong point against it. It is injurious to the young and to some who are not young. It is a selfish and unsocial habit, since women are excluded from its pleasures.

For men who can afford the expense and who have reached an age or are of a habit where it is not injurious to health, and who are considerate of the feelings of others, smoking is a very good thing indeed. In a fretful world, where anxious cares consume the nervous force, the smoke is a solace, a timely sedative, the "pipe of peace" and rest. It induces heart depression, even in healthy men, but this is only temporary with most, the effect of excessive indulgence, and disappears when the smoker becomes moderate.

For the young this advice is wholesome.

Until the age of twenty-one
All forms of smoking you must shun;
It stunts the growth, exhausts the purse,
And leads to evils that are worse.

We are quite confident that this age was selected for rhyming purposes. One should not be a smoker before thirty-five or forty. And then only on condition that smoking is in fact a solace and not a stimulant.

One very eminent English clergyman finds fault with smoking only because it "accentuates the separation of the sexes, and so fosters the coarser and more selfish side of men's habits." He declares that the only other alternative is that the "ladies should smoke as freely as men do," and he expects that we shall come to this.

Unfortunately the finer organization of women is not calculated to bear smoking. It would be more apt to stimulate and excite than to soothe women. But for women beyond middle life—well, they would find a great deal of solid comfort in smoking. A good smoke is about the best substitute for the bloom of youth when that is lost.

NOTES ON CELERY.

What Cultivation Has Done for This Plant—Some of Its Varieties.

Wild celery has a wide range. It extends from Sweden to Algeria, Egypt, Abyssinia, and in Asia from the Caucasus to Beloochistan, and the mountains of British India. It grows in ditches and other damp places, and in Europe it is rank, coarse, and somewhat poisonous.

Professor Gray calls it a "strong scented, acrid, if not poisonous plant, of the coast of Europe, of which the variety, dulce, garden celery, is rendered bland, and the base of the leaf stalks enlarged. Succulent and edible when blanched, through long cultivation."

One variety of cultivated celery, the celeriac, is raised only for the root or base of the leaves, which becomes a white solid bulb. This is more commonly called turnip-rooted celery, and differs more widely than the other from wild celery.

The larger plant, also called smellage, is kin to celery and botanically is a species of the parsley.—Good Housekeeping.

Common Salt in Building.

The use of common salt appears to be of increasing importance in connection with building materials.

Among the carpenters the article is now found to be an aid in the heating of glue, and where, as has been usual in joiners' and cabinetmakers' shops, the glue is melted in a jacket kettle, surrounded by water, it is said to be an improvement to place salt in the outer kettle—that is, the addition of salt raises the boiling point, and therefore enables the glue in the kettle to be kept at a higher temperature than could be maintained with water alone, and this is advantageous to the work.

Again, it is said that there is no salt in adding a [illegible] mortar in cold weather to preserve it from the injurious effects of freezing. It is known that, in many cases, mortar has been laid in cement in cold weather, and the addition of a considerable proportion of salt to the mixture, which, after [illegible] and thawings, has remained [illegible] in good condition, while work done without in mortar of the same kind, but without any admixture of salt, is found cracked by the frost.

Guarding Her Jewelry.

The saleswoman in a women's store sometimes suffers an embarrassing delicacy of offers, but when it comes to taking jewelry it discounts that possessed by no one and still has offers to spare. Take for instance, the case of the St. Louis woman who has more diamonds than she can wear with comfort at any one time.

She puts the stones in a box, puts the box in a rag bag, puts the rag bag on the closet floor, and at night puts the watch dog in the closet on the top of the rag bag, locks him in there, and every night hides the key in a different place.

Her husband says if she had her way she would arm him to the teeth and put him in the closet with the dog.

AN EXILED QUEEN.

The Obscure Life of Marie, of Naples.

Marie, the exiled queen of Naples, lives the year round in Paris, in hired apartments on a third floor, for which she pays $1,200 a year rent. The house is retired and unfashionable, and the rooms are furnished with almost meagre simplicity.

This recluse-like life is followed by the Queen's own desire, to which her husband readily accedes. She feels that she is an outcast from her former estate, and therefore is determined to live like an outcast.

"If," she once remarked, "I remain at the bottom of the ladder, I shall at least have no fear of falling further. If I cherish no hopes I shall suffer no disappointments; if I set my heart on nothing I shall not be bereaved.

"I went to Naples a queen, and in a year I left it an exile. My rooms in the palace there were scarcely put in order for me when I was driven out by the revolution. Then we went to Rome. My husband owned a palace there, and we made it our home. What then? In a few years Victor Emmanuel drove us out of it. We fled to England and then to France.

"We were about to make a permanent home and devote ourselves to each other and to our only child, when that child died. Has not misfortune pressed us cruelly?

"Doubtless, if we were to purchase a house and seek to make a permanent home it would be taken from us. If we were to make friends we would lose them. No, we are exiles and wanderers, and such we must remain."

Americans are breaking down under high pressure application to business and duties at the desk they are losing nerve force. Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic restores lost nerve force by supplying food for the nerve tissues, and by its gentle aperative action removes all restraint from the secretive organs, hence, curing all diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Dr. Geo. Ferguson will supply the genuine Red Clover Tonic at 50 cents a bottle.

Prohibition Of the LIQUOR TRAFFIC.
By Rev. S. M. VERNON, D.D.
The most active and aggressive period ever known in temperance work renders timely the appearance of this crisp, original and vigorous volume. It is a book quite out of the beaten track, breezy and piquant, bristling with telling facts, brief, clear, specific, candid, earnest, [illegible] and passionate, full of ringing [illegible] with stern truths.
It puts into the burning question of "Prohibition" things to the point of every mind and conscience, marshals its many startling facts in new and striking forms, clarifies and invigorates the logic, paints in vivid and impressive hues the monster whose daily victims but increase its hunger, and the poison of whose breath blights whatever it touches. "EATING CROW."

Two Good Stories Which Profess To Give the Origin of the Expression.

"Crow is an unpalatable bird, and "eating crow" is one of the popular phrases to indicate the enforced doing of some unpleasant thing, especially the enforced confession of error and is analogous to "eating your own words," "eating humble pie," "eating dirt," etc.

Indeed, some wiseacres would derive it from the French "manger la croûte" (eating dirt or refuse crust upon hand or knee before rev. and selling thus: "The dirt and crust of Paris may be smelt miles off."—Howell's Lexicon, 1660.)

But the American phrase is sufficiently intelligible as it stands, without any far-fetched foreign derivation.

Two stories, good enough to become classic, have entwined themselves around this phrase and profess to give its origin. Both are probably apocryphal, but both are worth preserving.

The first appeared in the Knickerbocker Magazine some forty years ago, and concerns a thrifty boarding house keeper on the Hudson and an intelligent patron. Whenever the latter remonstrated at the food he was told he was "too partikler."

"I kin eat anything," asserted the autocrat of the table, with a proud consciousness of superiority. "I kin eat crow."

The constant repetition of these words wearied the boarder. Finally he resolved to test the old man. Taking his gun with him he succeeded in bagging a fine, fat old crow. By dint of soft words and filthy lucre he induced the cook to prepare that crow for the table.

The cook was a Scotchwoman and used snuff. He borrowed all she had and sprinkled it liberally over the crow. Gave it an extra turn, and brought it before the host, saying, as he set it down:

"Now, my dear sir, you have said a thousand times, if you have said it once, that you can eat crow; here is one very carefully cooked."

The old man turned pale for a moment, but bracing himself against the back of his chair, and with, "I kin eat crow," he began cutting a good mouthful. He swallowed it, and, preparing for a second onslaught, looked his boarder straight in the eye, and ejaculated: "I've eat crow" and took a second portion.

He lifted his hands mechanically as if for a third attack, but dropped them quickly over the region of his stomach, and, rising hurriedly and unsteadily, retreated for the door, muttering as he went:

"But dang me if I hanker arter it."

The other story which is even better, has been told in a variety of ways, but this is the most finished version.

A Massachussetts regiment during the war was encamped near the estate of a wealthy planter. A city bred private having shot a tame crow on the planter's grounds, was discovered with the dead bird in his possession. Seizing the private's musket, which lay on the ground, the irate planter cried:

"As you've killed my crow, you've got to eat it."

There was no escape, and the private had to eat. After a few mouthfuls the planter asked, with a grin:

"How do you like it?"

"Well," was the reply, "I kin eat it but I don't hanker arter it."

"All right," said the planter; you've done pretty well. Here take your gun and get off."

But no sooner was the gun in the soldier's hand than he pointed it at the planter, saying:

And the planter, swearing and spluttering, was forced to obey.

Next day the planter came into camp and reported to the colonel that he had been insulted by a private soldier. Strict orders had been issued against insulting or injuring residents. The planter's description served to bring the soldier before the impromptu tribunal.

"Did you ever see this gentleman before?" asked the colonel.

"Oh, yaas," drawled the soldier, "we—ah—we dined together yesterday."—American Notes and Queries.

A SPRAT FOR A WHALE.

George Law's Great Game of Poker and What Came of It.

George Law, of New York, is said to have expended nearly $25,000 recently in making presents to a number of his personal friends at Saratoga.

A gentleman who was on intimate terms with him years ago, says that on one occasion he rode up the Hudson on an Albany boat with George Law, Commodore Vanderbilt and a third party, whose name I have now forgotten, and a game of poker was suggested, and my informant, knowing that the stakes were going to be quite large, did not go in, but George Law and Vanderbilt did with the other one.

Just as they started George Law whispered to my friend:

"If I seem to be playing a reckless game to-night don't you say a word."

He promised that he would keep his feelings to himself and watch the game.

They sat up nearly all night, and before they arose from their chairs Law had dropped $45,000 to Commodore Vanderbilt.

They parted at Albany in the morning, but about a week afterwards Law was encountered on Wall [illegible] when he said:

"I reckon you think I played a mighty reckless game with the Commodore the other night, but I have just this morning sold him my line of steamers and I have cleared $150,000 by the deal."

What He Was Sorry For.

As an informer [illegible] whose purposes are [illegible] to [illegible] cotton tail, but who had carried in some wood for his mamma one day recently was bidding her good night.

Mamma—"Have you been a good boy to-day?"

Hopeful—"Yes'm."

Mamma—"Couldn't you be better to-morrow if you should try hard?"

Hopeful, thoughtfully—"I don't think so."

Mamma—"Haven't you done anything to-day that you're sorry for?"

Hopeful, heavily and seriously—"I'm sorry I worked so hard on that wood pile."—Duluth Paragrapher.

He Knew Himself.

Clerk (to the new arrival)—"Going to stay long?"

"I don't know. Have you a boy who will go to the room with me every night and turn off the gas?"

"We can furnish you with one."

"Then I may stay several days. If I had to go up alone it would be just like me to blow out the gas and die."—Chicago Mail.

TARIFF QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

EDITOR of the HERALD:—

I notice in your paper of August 24 an article with the heading, "Twenty Pertinent Questions." As the editor who propounded these questions seems to be in want of some light on those questions, I will contribute my mite in order to relieve him of the embarrassed condition in which he seems to be so deeply enveloped.

Query No. 1—Why under the benign influence of our war tariff are one-third of our wage earners out of work one-third of the time?

The editor will find by visiting the different industries of the country that during the winter season in our northern climate a large amount of hands cannot be profitably employed in many of the industries of the country. It will be seen that in our large agricultural establishments they work from one-third to one-half less hands in the winter than they do in the summer. Other classes, such as stone masons, bricklayers, farm hands and sailors on our lakes and rivers and many [illegible] are out of work from strikes on railroads, in shops and mines. Those all contribute to swell the number, probably to nearly the amount set forth in this question. The war tariff has nothing more to do in throwing those hands out of work one-third of the year than it has in producing an earthquake.

Query No. 2—Why did wages in Great Britain go up between 1872 and 1873 nine per cent, while they went down in Massachusetts during the same time five per cent?

It is well known to all intelligent men that during the war and for several years after wages in this country were extremely high, and in Great Britain quite low in comparison to wages in this country; owing in part to the small amount of goods manufactured in Great Britain for the United States, as may be seen by reference to the importations into this country in the years of 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865. In 1862 the imports only amounted to $178,330,280, and only reached the sum of $209,656,525 in 1865, and it will be seen that our imports steadily increased from 1865 to 1873 to the enormous amount of $663,146,657. This stimulated the manufactories of England to increase their laboring force, as they had already found a profitable market in this country for their goods. Increase of business means increase of wages, and it is not surprising that wages did increase nine per cent in England, as the high price of labor in this country for several years caused a heavy draft upon the laborers of England to this country. And it will also be seen that while the laboring force was depleting in England ours was rapidly increasing, and the increase of laborers into this country caused the price of labor to recede in Massachusetts five per cent. from the war prices previously paid.

Query No. 3—Why did the cost of living here increase 14½ per cent. between 1860 and 1878?

This covers a period of 18 years and nearly five years of war prices, and it is not surprising when we take into account that from 1860 to 1870 the articles of daily consumption, such as wheat, butter and meats, and many other articles of food, advanced in price double, and in some articles treble, the prices before the war.

J. EVERHART.

As we have accorded Mr. Everhart the use of our columns to express his views on this subject, we see no impropriety in giving our own views also.

As to the first query we have this to say. The question was asked to answer the protection claim that a high tariff is for the especial benefit of the laboring man. The protection theory is that a high tariff makes plenty of work and gives good wages. This proposition we emphatically deny, and refute it by simply stating the fact that one-third of our laborers are idle one-third of the time. If a workman gets plenty of work at good wages the high tariff is the cause of it. But if he fails to get work the tariff is not responsible for that. Oh, no! This is a fair specimen of protection logic. When business prospers the tariff is the cause of it. When business is stagnant, under the same identical tariff, the tariff does not cause that, of course not. What a blessed institution this war tariff is, anyway. You say that many hands go out on strikes and all work is slack in winter. True, but why? That is the very point at issue. Strikes were unknown before the war. Shops run on short time when work is slack. But what makes work slack? That's the question. Come into this village and converse with our mechanics who have lived here for thirty years or more and you will gain some information that you never read in a high tariff monopoly newspaper. We could name several daily laborers in this village who years ago accumulated considerable property by their earnings who are now idle half the time. During the past ten years under this iniquitous tariff they have had hard work to support their families.

So much for the protection claim that a high tariff benefits the laborer.

Now the truth is, Mr. Everhart, that a tariff has but little to do with fixing the amount of wages or work, except indirectly. The price of wages, like the price of the crops you sell, is fixed by the great law of supply and demand. This protection claim that a high tariff makes high wages or makes high prices for the farmer's produce is all moonshine. There is free trade in labor. The American workman is compelled to compete with the pauper emigrants that are flooding this country yearly, overstocking the labor market and throwing our own laborers out of employment. Even your own candidate for Vice-president, Levi P. Morton, has discharged old faithful hands from his country farm and imported cheaper labor in direct violation of law. So there is practically free trade in the crops you sell from your farm. True, there is a duty of twenty cents a bushel on wheat, but what good does it do you? The Liverpool market regulates the price of your wheat. If you wish to buy a few bushels of imported wheat for seed it costs 20 cents a bushel more than it otherwise would, and you are robbed that much for the privilege of improving your seed wheat. The farmers last year imported $218,000 worth of wheat, wholly for seed, paying 20 cents tax on each bushel; and they exported wheat to the amount of $165,780,000, and on this vast amount of exported wheat the tariff did not help a single American farmer to the amount of one cent. The farmer has a duty of four cents a pound on butter. Last year the butter imports were $38,000, and the butter exports were $2,000,000. So the duty on cheese is four cents a pound. Last year we imported $875,000 worth of cheese, and exported $7,595,000. What a prodigious benefit these duties are to the farmer! Not only is the price of your butter and cheese fixed by the foreign market, but the railroad attorneys who ran the Chicago convention recommended the abolition of internal taxes as the only proper method of reducing the surplus, which would ruin the dairy interests by flooding the country with bogus butter.

But the tariff does have a mighty influence in fixing the price of all manufactured goods which the farmer and laborer must buy. It increases the cost of your clothing, your fuel, your building materials, your farm machinery, your household furniture, your crockery and tinware, your salt and sugar and rice, your carpets and tools, yes, and even your bible and your castor oil. Cotton and quinine, thank the Lord, are on the free list. A man can buy his summer clothing at a reasonable price, and he can indulge in a shake of the ague occasionally without being robbed for the privilege.

To the second query—You attribute the rise in wages in Great Britain to the increased importation of English manufactured fabrics into the United States. But you are begging the whole question at issue again. What has caused these increased importations? You claim that free trade is the sum of all villainies, and yet England under a free trade policy is prospering as never before, and her sales of goods in the United States are increasing every year. Again, the protection theory is that a high tariff is necessary to retain the "home market" for our own manufacturers. Then how is it that our own manufacturers fail to hold the "home market?" In other words, sir, the experience of 25 years under the most exorbitant tariff this country has ever known demonstrates the fact that protection does not protect. If you will read the article on "Wool and the Tariff," which appeared in the HERALD of Sept. 6th you will gain considerable elementary information on this question. Owing to our present iniquitous war tariff the woolen manufacturers are wholly unable to control even the "home market" let alone increasing their export trade. Nearly one-half our woolen goods are now made in English looms—exactly 47½ per cent. All these goods should be made here, and could be under a reasonable tariff, which would double the demand for woolen workers and double the demand for domestic wool. You say, "the increase of laborers into this country caused the price of labor to recede in Massachusetts five per cent," etc. Well, well, here you are squarely on our platform. You admit that it is the law of supply and demand after all that regulates the price of labor. But your protection fanatics claim that a high tariff makes more work and raises wages, and the tariff has remained substantially the same for 25 years.

To the third query—The cause of the increased cost of living is too patent to need any argument. The tariff adds 47 per cent. on the average to the cost of nearly everything the consumer has to buy. We admit that during the years of the war comparisons on all questions are of little use, but a comparison of the decade from '50 to '60 with the decade from '70 to '80 is a fair one, and the increased cost of living during the second ten years over the first period is caused wholly by the war tariff. This assertion cannot be disputed. In this connection we respectfully refer you to two extracts which appear on our second page this week, that cover some of the points herein presented very fully. The Home Market Humbug shows how little a high tariff aids the farmer, who has only exports crops to sell. The article on Labor and Protection shows what the leading labor paper of Indiana thinks about the fallacy that a high tariff benefits the laboring man. I can easily understand why the few millionaires who have become such under the fostering care of our present war tariff should raise heaven and earth in their efforts to retain the system. There is nothing mysterious about that. But why an intelligent farmer or laborer of Lenawee county should seek to retain a war tariff which robs the consumer, demoralizes business, deprives the workman of employment and plasters the farmer's home with mortgages, is beyond our comprehension. This is one of the mysteries of modern politics.

Inter-State Industrial Exposition at Chicago.

The immense structure is now laden to its fullest capacity with the finest and most magnificent exhibits ever displayed; from almost every quarter of the civilized world, illustrating as it does every avenue of human industry in its most complete form, it is almost a necessity that they who would keep abreast of our most advanced ideas in both industry, science and art, should not fail to visit this great exposition.

Every railroad and transportation line running into the city have made reduced rates, and there is every indication that a much larger attendance will follow than any year that has preceded.

THE WISDOM OF CHILDHOOD.

An Effective Rebuke of a Heartless Son.

An old grandfather had become quite feeble, and his hand shook so that he could hardly hold a dish. Frequently it slipped from his trembling fingers and was broken. His son harshly scolded him for what he called such carelessness.

One day the latter's little boy came into the room to find his father at work on a block of wood, and asked him if he was making another pig's trough.

He replied:

"I am making a trough for an old hog to eat out of." The fact is, it is for your grandfather. He's broken so many dishes that I must stop it or we'll all go to the poorhouse. Now, my boy, run away and play."

But the boy hesitated, and slowly said: "Father, hadn't I better stay and learn how to make it, so when you get old and break up the dishes I can make one for you to eat out of?"

The trough wasn't finished.—Hartford Herald.

While There's Life There's Hope.

"As you can only be a sister to me," he said, in broken tones, "will you let me kiss you good night?"

She shyly said she would.

Then he folded her in his strong arms and gently placing her head against his manly breast, he kissed her passionately.

"Mr. Sampson," she said softly, "this is all so new to me, so—so different from what I thought it to be, that if you will give me a little time to—to think it over, I—I may——"

But let us withdraw from this sacred scene.—New York Sun.

We have a few copies left of the supplement sheet containing the Britton tariff debate, which will be distributed to any person who may desire a copy. Every voter in the district ought to read this debate.

WHITENACK, BORDINE & CO.,

TO YOU PERSONALLY.

DEAR SIR:

We wish to call your attention to three facts concerning THE INTERNATIONAL CYCLOPEDIA.

1. It is the most comprehensive Cyclopedia in the world. There's perhaps only one other that contains as many titles, and that is condensed into three volumes, the value of its large number of subjects is marred by the necessarily brief and unsatisfactory manner in which they are treated. THE INTERNATIONAL in fifteen large, but not unwieldy, Royal Octavo volumes, can treat of its 50,000 titles with a degree of fulness sufficient to their importance. It is the fullest, not only in number of titles, but in the relative amount of matter given each title.

2. It has the advantage of being International. The Brittanica is lamentably deficient in American matter, and Appleton's is silent on many foreign subjects of interest. In THE INTERNATIONAL, the articles on foreign men, places, histories, laws, etc., are written chiefly by foreigners of distinction, while the articles pertaining to American interests have been prepared almost entirely by American editors. This gives THE INTERNATIONAL a COMPLETENESS wanting in other Cyclopedias.

3. It is the cheapest Cyclopedia of its size in the world. The Brittanica in its cheapest form costs $120. Appleton's in its cloth binding costs $85, which is more than we charge for THE INTERNATIONAL in its finest Morocco binding.

There are many other points showing the superiority of THE INTERNATIONAL over other works of reference. We merely select these three, urging them upon your earnest consideration.

We shall be glad to correspond with you further. Please reply.

Yours truly,

A pamphlet with the title "The Tariff" consisting of cartoons and comments from Puck, has been issued by the publishers of that weekly. It is issued primarily as a campaign document, but is also valuable in the line of general information. For a clear and concise exposition of the working of the tariff laws to the disadvantage of the consumer and the great majority of the people of the country, this little book surpasses any thing we have seen. The facts and figures given can not be denied, are convenient for reference and valuable for study; the cartoons are vigorous; and the comments clear and logical.

A late copy of the Chicago Evening Journal contains a flattering notice of a speech given by Mrs. Minerva Elliott at a Republican meeting in Hyde Park. We understand that the lady in question was formerly Miss Minnie Spaulding of Tecumseh. The paper says that she "charmed the audience by an address of great force, with much argument, wit and passages of real pathos and eloquence.

The following deserved compliment to our friend Capt. F. B. Wood, appears in a late number of the Hudson Gazette:

"If brains, manliness, integrity in a young man are to be commended, that mark of esteem and encouragement is due Frederick B. Wood, of Tecumseh, the Democratic nominee for the position of county prosecutor. Too well up in legal learning to be hood-winked, too honest to be bribed, too much of a soldier to evade his duty, where is there a candidate more deserving of the confidence and endorsement of his county?"

The nomination of Ira Waterman for County Clerk on the Democratic ticket is a peculiarly happy one. His training has fitted him most thoroughly to fill that place with honor and credit. Mr. Waterman came with his parents to Dover township in the year 1854, when only two years of age. He attended school in the Adrian High school and at the State Normal. He began teachin district school at the age of seventeen. In 1875 he took charge of the Addison school, where he remained five years. He went to Hudson in the fall of 1880 and has been teaching there ever since, having just entered upon his ninth year. He has served six years on the county board of school examiners. Justice H. A. Robinson of Detroit, has come out for Cleveland and tariff reform. He was the republican and labor candidate for congress in the Detroit district two years ago. We commend this case of flopping to the prayerful consideration of the Adrian Times. Perhaps the Times can duplicate its genteel notice on Walter Westerman's flop.

Oscar W. Bryan of Kansas is circulating around among his old friends. It is his first visit to Tecumseh in thirteen years and he finds that many changes have taken place within that time. The farmers in their prime then are growing grey now and the companions of his boyhood then are fathers of families now.

SIXTEEN HICKORY POLES.

THE DEMOCRATIC CLANS OF CLINTON AND TECUMSEH UNITE IN A GRAND POLE RAISING.

The Program in Detail as Carried out Last Saturday—A Synopsis of the Speeches Delivered and the Incidents of the Rally.

When the Democrats of Northern Lenawee take hold of any political enterprise it moves right along like business. Last Saturday was the day chosen for a grand pole raising in these parts. The Tecumseh City Band was engaged for the entire day, and the work was placed in charge of Ed. VanDeMark, W. B. Keyser, H. A. Stacy and other Democrats who have raised hickories before and are "well up" in the business.

About 10 o'clock a. m. the procession and the band gathered at A. B. VanDeMark's store in Clinton village and put up a beautiful single hickory over sixty feet tall, from which a Cleveland and Thurman banner was unfurled to the breeze. This was No. One.

No. Two was raised on R. B. Millcorner, west of Clinton. This pole was over 70 feet in height, with a fine streamer.

The crowd then turned south and raised two fine sticks in front of Geo. Conger's and Aaron Bruce's. Streamers were hoisted on both.

No. Five was raised at Lew Meeker's, on Will Keyser's farm, which bore a splendid streamer.

No. Six, 64 feet high, was raised at Ben Dove's, which was decorated with a streamer [illegible] Buffalo by his sister.

At Horatio K[illegible] foot pole was set on end [illegible] with a fine banner.

No. Eight was hoisted at W. B. Keyser's. Here the crowd had collected in large numbers and Judge Stacy was called on for a speech. He spoke of the certainty of Cleveland's election. There was no reasonable doubt of his carrying the debatable states and there was no danger of his being counted out as Tilden was in 1876. He introduced statistics to show the greater increase of wealth per capita between 1850 and 1860, under a low tariff, than under the war tariff which followed. But during this high tariff period millionaries and monopolies have increased a hundred fold. At the same time the common people of England have been constantly bettering their condition, under free trade. He was glad to see the sons and grandsons present of Democrats whom he had known for fifty years. With the aid and support of these young men he felt confident of success.

At the conclusion of the Judge's remarks a lunch of fried cakes and coffee was served to the crowd present by the Democratic ladies of the neighborhood.

After three rousing cheers for the ladies, the procession moved east to Elmer Wheaton's, on the Coryell farm, where No. Nine was put up in short order, with a beautiful streamer.

Robert Smith was the owner of No. Ten. This pole was 62 feet high.

August Kopp was the man who claimed No. Eleven. No. Twelve was raised for L. Herbison, and No. Thirteen for H. A. Stacy. These three last were all in the Newburg neighborhood.

No. Fourteen was raised for N. Mattison, a fine pole 66 feet high.

Chas. Spicer was the owner of No. Fifteen, which was the last on the list before reaching Tecumseh village. As each pole was raised it was greeted with lusty cheers for the Democratic standard bearers, Cleveland and Thurman. The poles were none of them spliced, but a finer lot of straight single hickories were never raised in Lenawee co. The "tackle" worked smoothly at every place and each pole was lifted into position in short order, while the band furnished plenty of music to keep the crowd in good humor.

After leaving Spicer's the procession came to the village, made a detour of the principal streets and halted in Brownville at the corner of Brown and Mills streets. Here a beautiful spliced hickory 126 feet high was tipped on end in presence of a big crowd. The gathering had grown in size from the time of starting in the morning and numbered several hundred people at Brownville. After the pole and streamer were in position Alex. Richard, of Raisin, was called on for a speech and responded in a very happy manner. He declared that this was one of the most important campaigns in our history. If ever it was the duty of the farmer to vote he should vote now for a reduction of taxation. He asked the voters assembled if they would approve of their supervisors raising a yearly bonus and locking it up in the banks of the county. He also spoke of the way J. G. Blaine straddled the Republican party like a Collossus, and his reports of the Maine election seemed to be taken by his party rather than the official returns. He congratulated the neighbors who procured the pole, and Mr. J. W. Benedict, on whose democratic soil it grew, for their successful efforts in getting up this rally.

At 7:30 p. m. the City Band took possession of the band stand on the main corners and soon a large crowd gathered to listen to the speakers of the evening. Seth Bean and J. L. O'Mealey, of Adrian, made two telling speeches of about an hour each, and were eagerly listened to throughout their remarks.

Mr. Bean said: The cry was raised in '84 that it was unsafe to trust the Democratic party with power. Three years under Cleveland have proven this charge to be groundless. To-day they say it is unsafe to trust the Democracy with a further lease of power, as they will destroy our American system of protection. What is this system? Is it not as much the system of China or Italy? Is it not a tariff of the past? A terrible war, with all its loss of treasure, came upon us. Every method was tried to raise the necessary revenue and our present tariff laws were enacted. Now, we say, peace has come and our unjust taxes should pass away. We have bought bonds at a premium of 29 cts. Is this just, that the people should pay a premium of 29 cents to the bond holder? Now we are told that this system has built up our country. But it is an insult to American industry to attribute to discriminating laws the fruits which our perseverance and acheivements have won. It is an unjust tax to have an unfair tax. It is the money which goes into the pocket of the manufacturer that I kick about. As an example, on a suit of clothes which costs $10, counting a profit of $2 and a tariff of $4, we have a cost of $16. We will say the American manufacturer charges $15.75, or $3.75 more than cost and legitimate profit. Now, he puts $3 in his pocket. Does he pay his laborers more for this? Or does he hire them for just what he can? Farmers are only protected on wool, while they pay a duty on lumber, nails and nearly all they use or buy. Yet you must not touch this American system. Now who is protected, capital or labor? The laborer has labor to sell, the capitalist goods. Which is the duty on, labor or goods? Is it not plain that this tariff makes commodities dear and labor cheap? How is it that Italians come over unhindered and work for nearly nothing when goods, the household goods of the laborer, are taxed? We cannot compete with England till we have free raw material. Free steel, free wool, free lumber, free copper, free tin, must be accessible to our manufacturers ere our superior skill and machines can compete with countries thus favored. But this system, this great American system, was aptly described by Mr. Brooks when he compared it to a cow which was being fed at the west and being milked at the east. Gradually under discriminating and class legislation, the eastern states are controlling the mass of our enormous finances. The mortgages are coming west and the money goes east. The Democrats wish to let remain the taxes on luxuries. The Republican party wishes to lift the tax from tobacco, and even whisky, rather than touch the protective system. Mr. Allen would not vote for a reduction on sugar, cloth, lumber, salt, till whisky and tobacco are free. Now, about wool. I am a wool grower myself, and if I thought I would be protected and benefitted by a duty on wool with any fairness to the rest of the country, I would favor such legislation. But I cannot see it in that light. About one-half the wool made up in this country is from imported raw material. But nearly all of this imported wool cannot be produced in this country, and the coarser wools enter into carpets and all cheap woolen goods, thus making them dearer at a needless and useless expense. We cannot compete with foreign manufacturers unless we have the raw material free to mix with our own wools. Facts above all things substantiate our theory. The history of the price of wool shows a higher price under low than under high tariff.

At the close of Mr. Bean's remarks the band gave a fine selection, and Mr. O'Mealey then entertained the crowd with an earnest talk of about an hour. We regret that lack of space prevents our giving a synopsis of his speech. It was devoted mostly to the tariff question, and he presented the subject in a very attractive manner. The Democrats have good reason to be well satisfied with the entire day's exercises.

C. M. Burlingame, who is now foreman in the Coldwater Republican office, was in town over Sunday.

The Prohibitionists held a fine out door meeting on the main corners last Saturday afternoon. The band stand was used as a platform and the crowd gathered on railroad street between Bidwell's block and Strong & McNair's store. Joseph H. Ackerson of Albion College, made an excellent speech which gave general satisfaction to all parties. He was well posted on the issues of current politics and gave his views in a clear and forcible manner. The singing by the glee club was good and added much to the interest of the meeting. Prof. McCarthy will devote one week to Lenawee county later in the campaign, beginning Oct. 22d.

COUNTY TEACHER'S ASSOCIATION.

The next meeting of the Lenawee County Teacher's Association will be held in Adrian, October 13th. The date previously agreed upon, Oct. 6th, has been changed at the request of Sec. E. G. Walker, who holds an examination at that time.

Papers upon the following subjects will be read and discussed: Arithmetic; The Art of Questioning; The Teacher and Society; The Needs of the District Schools. The Reading Circle will receive careful discussion. Good music will enliven the occasion. State Supt. Joseph Estabrook is expected to be present and assist in the exercises.

The last meeting of the Association was such a success, and the Institute which followed it was of such a high character that we have every hope of a prosperous organization. No teacher should miss the next meeting as the subjects for discussion are of practical importance. Let us all turn out and hear the State Superintendent. It is not often that we have such an opportunity.

N. H. HAYDEN, Pres.

OBITUARY.

Died on the 21st. inst., after a painful illness of a cancerous affection, Mrs. Sarah Cornelia Henry, beloved wife of Mr. Herbert Henry, formerly of Tecumseh. Mrs. Henry was a daughter of Mr. George Sisson of Raisin. The funeral was held on Monday the 24th inst., in the M. E. church at Blissfield. The service for the burial of the dead according to the ritual of the Episcopal church was read, at her request, by the Rev. J. Phelps of Tecumseh, and a sermon preached appropriate to the occasion. The remains were then conveyed to the village cemetery, accompanied by a large number of loving and sympathizing friends, and, after the closing service—"Earth to Earth—were temporarily deposited in the vault. A loving and devoted husband has lost a faithful and most affectionate wife; six dear little orphan children are deprived of a mother's care and oversight so much needed at their time of life; an aged father mourns the loss of one who was always dear to his heart. Surely such a sad bereavement may well call forth unusual expressions of grief and sympathy.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Muskegon county folks are congratulating themselves on evidences of their increasing goodness. Hitherto it has been quite a land for dear divorces, but there are only seventeen such cases on the docket of the present term of court.

A Battle Creek [illegible] recently applied for a marriage license and got it, averring the expectant bride was a white lady, but after they were married the neighbors insisted she was blacker in the ace of spades. Love seems to be color-blind.

A snowstorm winged its feathery way 'oer Hancock the other day, just to remind 'em, we suppose, that the summer resort season is about to take another vacation for nine or ten months.

A log cub from a big cottonwood in Detroit, scaled 2,530 feet. Quite a city log.

The Grand Rapids Boat club, bearing the aboriginal name of O-wash-ta-nang, has returned from the regatta at Salt Lake city without capturing even one little prize. But they got what they were cheap in pursuit of—a grand good time.

A small and slender waist seems to be generally regarded as about the proper caper by the average girl of the period. So thought Miss Mary Crawford, of Delsay, and she laced, and laced, and thought herself very pretty. But the other night she attended a dance, poor thing, and dropped dead in the midst of a quadrille. A constricted blood-vessel burst and let her young life ebb away.

An eel ran a foul of the wheel of a Flint saw-mill the other day and stopped it. When fished out the eel was in several sections.

A Morenci man sold 1,000 watermelons in a single week, and still not a case of cholera has been reported from that section.

An Atlanta man claims to have raised a cucumber this season that measures five inches around the waist, and six feet in length. The snake and fish yarners aren't the only chaps who can tell a good story.

Fire at Britton on the 14th destroyed three stores and the postoffice. Loss, $7,300; insured for about one-half that amount.

The story is told of a Lapeer county nag that has attained the venerable age of 30 years, which has been traded so often that when stranger approaches the v. n. voluntarily opens its mouth to show that it has the teeth of a young horse, and is therefore valuable trading property.

An express train on the Saginaw, Tuscola & Huron railway struck a burned section near Borne station and left the rails, and was afterward entirely destroyed by fire. Several bad bruises resulted from the accident but no one was killed. The smoke was so dense from the forest fires of the vicinity that one could see but a few feet away.

A lady living at Lexington claims to know all about the Crouch murder case that once caused so much commotion at Jackson, and that she is able to clear away the mystery that has hitherto surrounded that bloody transaction. We give this as a pointer to the detectives who worked so long and unsuccessfully on the case.

It is claimed that the forgeries of Miss Jennie Sweatland, committed when that lady was employed as a clerk in the Kalamazoo abstract office, will amount to at least $10,000. Jennie is now in jail.

H. H. Graves, a Detroit builder and contractor, was robbed the other night of $2,040 in cash. He intended to use the money next day to pay off his men.

Memphis folks got a wee little bit of a peep into the future on a recent Sunday, and some gipsy fortune tells got $150.

J. M. Turner is a Lansing man with a good farm and lots of fine stock, and he raked in $[illegible] worth of premiums at the state fair.

The contract for papering a Davison church was let on a recent Sunday, and the church folks are wondering what's coming next.

A Barry county justice of the peace was applied to the other day for a dose of matrimony, the groom weighing 100 pounds and the bride 300. He proved equal to the occasion, and the little man went away with his big jewel, happy as a king.

William Tate, an Ann Arbor man 80 years old, dropped dead in the hallway of his home from heart disease.

The Bellaire Breeze offers to take watermelons on subscription. The publisher is lucky to get even a watermelon from a certain class of subscribers—the don't-pay kind.

Girls, just read this, and then when your fellow pops the question, do—well, do as you're a-mind to. A Grand Rapids lady, married too, has been left a large fortune by a Chicago man whom she once refused to marry.

A Lansing man died the other day and was gathered to his fathers as even the Lansing man must do and his eight big brothers acted as pall-bearers at the funeral.

And now they claim to have found rock at Ishpeming that assays more than $100,000 to the ton. If these golden stories keep on increasing at this rate we'll either have to stop printing Ishpeming items or else buy a new font of figures.

An East Saginaw dry goods establishment extensively advertised its opening day, and 5,000 ladies swarmed through the establishment on that occasion. And the lazy, shiftless, sleepy merchant still drawled out the old tune—advertising—don't—pay.

Nelson Potter, who was Jeddo's postmaster for more than thirty years, has taken a trip across the dark river, at the age of 76.

Smith Wood, a Branson boy of 7½ summers, has been gathered to his fathers. He was an old time resident, and a justice of the peace for twenty-four years, and highly respected.

J. A. Dochesne, a Genesee county farmer, became tired of life, and taking a rope, went to his barn and ended this earthly career by the hanging act.

A Flint firm—dealer in wet goods—have been arrested for running a gambling shop. The charge was preferred by a woman whose husband lost $2,000 buck-ing the tiger, which will compel her to go without a new hat for a whole year to come. No failures among the local millinery firms are looked for, however.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

A CONTINUED IMPROVEMENT IN THE VOLUME OF BUSINESS.

Crop Report Favorable as to Corn—Business at Interior Points Fairly Active—Pork Products General Higher—The Iron Market Hardening—The Circulation of Money—Business Failures for a Week.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The volume of legitimate business continues to improve. Crop reports are altogether favorable as to corn. The general averages of prices has again declined slightly. In stocks a severe reaction, averaging $3 a share, culminated last Saturday, and there has been an average advance of $1.50 per share. The crop which is most important in railroad or financial aspects is not large; the yield of wheat is 80,000,000 to 90,000,000 bushels short of a full crop. Heavy rains late in the season have also injured cotton, to some extent as to grade, and probably as to quantity. But the feeling still prevails that a large business may be expected for the coming season, though fuller supplies of money at western and southern centers may cause demands upon New York to be lighter than usual.

Official reports show that the money in circulation of all kinds was about $1,361,000,000 Sept. 1, against $1,321,000,000 a year ago, and the treasury has put out this month about $2,200,000 more than it has taken in, besides adding to the circulation the amount of gold and silver coinage. For the past week the addition to circulation has been $8,200,000, and on Thursday $3,750,000 more bonds were purchased, 430 being paid for 4 per cents. The reports from interior points show that money is generally in ample supply, though there is some closeness at Cleveland and Detroit, and the market is tight at Atlanta. Collections have improved for speculation, money here is in abundant supply, but for commercial uses the market is growing harder.

Business is fairly active at all interior points reporting, and at most it is better than a year ago. But while the principal centers report good and increasing trade, the accounts from several of unusual dullness at the smaller towns in regions surrounding suggest that distribution may not be answering expectations. The iron market grows harder at Philadelphia, though one company still sells at $18 for No. 1. Coal moves largely on past contracts, and the year's output thus far is 8 per cent. in excess of last year's to date. In wool prices are a shade higher, but the speculative demand has abated.

Foreign trade has improved a little, but exports for the present three weeks from New York are still 9 per cent. below last year's, while imports here show an increase of 9 per cent. The preliminary statements for August show that the exports of breadstuffs, provisions, cattle, cotton, and oil were $8,577,938 smaller than for the same month last year, or 23 per cent., but last year's exports for that month were exceptionally large.

Wheat has been moderately active, with sales of 28,000,000 bushels, and only ¼ net advance in price, while corn has declined 1¾ cents, oats ⅞ a cent, and oil ⅝ of a cent. Pork products are higher; dressed hogs, 10 cents and lard 50 cents per 100 pounds. Cotton has advanced 1-16 with sales of 404,000 bales, and coffee ½ cent with sales of 408,000 bags. Hides are steady, but leather has advanced fully 1 cent. Meanwhile exports of wheat from this country for July and August amount to 18,500,000 bushels, flour included, against 35,150,000 bushels last year, and the supply remaining for export is probably about 24,000,000 bushels greater than last year's exports for the rest of the crop year.

The business failures number 218, as compared with 217 last week and 224 the week previous to the last. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 183.

CARRIED OFF BY AN EAGLE.

A 2-Months-Old Babe Killed by the King of Birds.

WICHITA, Kan., Sept. 23.—The baby of a farmer, William Beattie, who lives on the Cimmaron river north of the territory line, was carried off by an eagle Saturday. Beattie went to work in the morning leaving in his dugout his two children, one 5 years old and a baby aged 2 months. About noon Beattie returned and found his girl in tears. She said she had taken the baby into the yard and left it while she went into the house. In a few minutes she heard a cry and on looking out saw the baby "flying away," as she expressed it. The father knew at once that an eagle had visited his home and summoned his neighbors to the wooded banks of the river, for which the eagle had made. In about an hour the sound of a shot summoned the searchers together. One of the men had found the eagle and was engaged in a desperate conflict with it. He had emptied his gun at the big bird and broken a wing and was using his gun as a club, when reinforcements arrived. The eagle flattened into the hay, and when the father saw his infant dead, the child horribly lacerated and part gone.

PRAIRIE FIRES IN DAKOTA.

Much Grain Destroyed and Farmers Suffer Heavy Loss.

WASHINGTON, D. T., Sept. 24.—Prairie fires are raging all over this section and out along the Little Missouri. The fire burned over the entire southern portion of Campbell county, and the wind being in the southeast all day brought the flames into the vicinity of La Grace, the county seat. A rumor reached here that a Norwegian was burned to death. Farmer Strauss attempted to burn a fire break around his farm Saturday night but the flames got beyond control, and before they were checked they consumed forty-five acres of oats and a large amount of other grain stacked up, belonging to his neighbor, a farmer named Joseph Dietrich. The losses in this neighborhood will be large. Frost destroyed much of the grain, and the rest is being burned up, leaving an alarming prospect for the farmer for this winter.

MANDAN, D. T., Sept. 24.—Ranges on Cannon Ball river are being swept by prairie fires. There are no reports of serious loss to settlers except of grass. The ground is very dry. A good rain is needed.

Long-Standing

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyren, (of Fernandina, Fla.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have no humor to finish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

LESSONS REVIEWED.

THIRD QUARTER OF THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES CLOSED.

Lesson XIV, for Sept. 30, 1888—Topic, the Forty Years' Wandering in the Wilderness of Sinai—Golden Text, John i. 45.

The Second Quarter closed the mission of Christ with an exposition of His great commission to His disciples, to "Go and teach all nations," an injunction which passed to their successors and rests upon the Christian world today. The Third Quarter's lessons relate to God's dealings with Israel and the settlement of the chosen people in the Holy Land—the action which prepared the scene and laid the foundation for the establishment of Christ's earthly kingdom.

The lesson for July 1 turns upon the awfully sublime promise, as quoted in Heb. viii, 10: "I will be to them a God and they shall be to me a people." This is, indeed, a "Golden Text." Then follows (from Ex. xxiv, 1-12) the announcement and formal ratification of God's covenant with the children of Israel, at the foot of Mount Sinai. From Egypt to Sinai the people had been taught God's power; in the giving of the law they were shown His majesty as law giver; they now received a glimpse of His character in the dispensation of grace; it was but a glimpse. It was the "first covenant." The last was to be manifest in Jesus Christ. The people accepted the first covenant; there was a universal confession of faith, and in the erection of the twelve pillars and the sacrificial offerings the covenant was ratified. Most appropriately the ratification closed with an awfully sublime visitation. Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel went up into the mountain and there had a vision of the God of Israel. Of certainty a symbolic vision, a show of kindness, not the that of terror at Sinai. This form, the initial probation begun, the train of events to culminate in the incarnation of Christ.

The second Sunday of the quarter brings us to the first great mystery, only forty days after the resurrection. And in that mystery Moses was a participant. He took their place in the mount and received the golden rule, and they danced around it with the foolish notion that they were worshiping their God. It was a result of the force of habit. For 400 years they had been slaves to an idolatrous people, a people who worshiped the sacred Bull, Apis, and when Moses was long absent the old idolatrous feeling returned. Many generations passed before the Hebrews were entirely purged of this idolatrous taint. Again and again were they scourged, again and again did God bring them into bondage to their enemies; yet their rulers again led them into idolatry, and Jeroboam finally completed the division of their nation by setting up a golden calf. But the cure was thorough at the last. Idolatry was so thoroughly driven from the Jewish mind that all the power of Rome could not compel them to admit the images of heathen gods into their public places. Moses, at God's command, no doubt, inflicted on them a terrible punishment.

In the third lesson Moses receives a remarkable assurance of the renewal of God's favor and a promise of His continued presence. The next lesson gives a pleasing illustration of the people's willingness to serve God. They give their choicest possessions as free gifts for the tabernacle. Of this giving the text of Ex. xxxv, 20-29, informs us that it was prompt, willing, even enthusiastic; that it was abundant and according to each one's ability. The last lesson for July (Ex. xl, 1-16) gives the final arrangement of the tabernacle and directions to the priests. Just a year had elapsed since the Israelites left Egypt, and their first anniversary was celebrated by the setting up of the tabernacle. It was their national day, their day of deliverance, their religious festival and their day of prayer and reconsecration. It was not only so to them that the Fourth of July is to us, but all that Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's are and all that the memorial days of various orders and demonstrations are to their members. It was all this because in Israel government and religion were in one, patriotism and piety flowed in the same channel, and God was their King. Hence idolatry was not merely a sin as with us—it was the deadliest treason, and like other forms of treason was most justly punished with death. In the Holy of Holies was placed the "Ark of the Testimony," an oblong chest which held the two tables of stone, a pot of manna and Aaron's rod that budded. The cover was overlaid with pure gold, and in the ends were the two wonderful cherubim with wings outspread towards each other over the Mercy Seat, the top of the ark. The symbolic force and beauty of all this is sublime. Over this ark, over the Mercy Seat, rested the glory of the Lord: here was His visible presence, as far as He deigned to manifest Himself, and here he communicated with the High Priest who entered the Holy of Holies once a year with the blood of atonement and the golden censer. The Lord had before spoken out of the mount; henceforth He "called unto Moses and spake unto him out of the Tabernacle of the congregation." Henceforth He was to speak oftener as the God of grace calling to the Mercy Seat.

In the next lesson (Lev. i, 1-9) we find the directions for burnt offerings; and in the next an explanation of the symbol—the great lesson that "without the shedding of blood is no remission." A sinful priest cannot make atonement for a sinful people, so the first atonement was for the high priest himself. After the atonement, the institution of the priesthood and the renewal of moral and ceremonial uncleanness, naturally comes the Feast of Tabernacles, which was studied in the lesson for August 19 (Lev. xxiii, 31-44); and having completed the ecclesiastical organization, the narrative at this point suddenly changes, and through the book of Numbers is historical and statistical. Four lessons are occupied with accounts of the cowardly unbelief of the people in the matter of the spies, their awful sentence to death in the wilderness, and the forty years' wandering that was to make a truly brave and faithful people, and finally the disappointment of Moses in being deprived of the privilege of bringing them into the promised land. In the next lesson we part with the great Hebrew law giver. In Deuteronomy xxxiv, 1-12, we are told of his death and wonderful burial, the succession of Joshua and the opening of a new era in Israel. The conquest of Canaan is soon to begin. The Israelites have been tried and purified by hardships in the wilderness. They are now to be tried in a terrible war, and after that comes, perhaps, the greatest trial of all, the test as to whether they can survive well in purity and maintain the national and religious spirit through years of peace in a land of plenty, with the example of the idolatrous Gentiles all around and among them.

ABE LINCOLN'S OLD LOVE.

The Venerable Woman Who Declined to Marry Him in Her Girlhood.

Mrs. William Drenan, of Honey Grove, Tex., said to a newspaper man recently:

"I was born in Bingham county, North Carolina, in 1816, but when quite young moved with my parents to Sangamon county, Illinois, where I lived until, in 1842, I moved to Texas.

"I knew Mr. Lincoln well—knew and played with him when he wore knee breeches and went barefooted with the rest of us.

"We attended the same school in an old log schoolhouse, presided over by what I now know to have been a very primitive but good old man. He didn't know much, as men are educated these days; but, lah, me! we used to think him a compendium of knowledge. And Mr. Lincoln (simply 'Abe' then, though) was a very apt scholar, always ahead in his studies.

"As a young man he was most exemplary—generous to a fault, chivalrous, kind, honest and trustworthy; and he loved his good old mother.

"One little incident I never will forget.

"We all went to church one Sunday, a creek being on the way, over which we crossed on two fallen logs. Mr Lincoln was not present during church—was away, I believe, in Springfield. Several of us girls had walked, as it was a beautiful day. But just before church was out, the sky clouded up and it commenced to rain very hard.

"We girls, at the conclusion of the service, were sitting in the church waiting for the rain to cease, when Mr. Lincoln rode up. His mother had also attended service, and on foot. After the rain was over, he assisted Mrs Lincoln on to his horse, saying he would walk home with the girls, which he did. But when we came to the creek the logs had been washed away and the water was fully three feet deep.

"What to do we didn't know, but young Abe did. He commenced with me, and carried us all over in safety, till the last one, a very flashy girl, was only left on the wrong side. He waded through after her and took her in his arms, starting across.

"We were making all sorts of fun of them, and, laughing gayly, when she, being a mischievous body, anyway, whispered something to him which caused him to give vent suddenly to a loud peal of laughter, when, somehow, the girl slipped from his arms, and both fell flat into the water. But it didn't spoil our fun in the least. Why, bless your soul, when we saw the two woebegone-looking creatures rise and wade to the shore we laughed all the more, and so did they. Those were good old times, indeed.

"It was early in the spring of 1834, one evening when we were out walking, that Mr. Lincoln asked me to marry him, but as I had already formed an attachment with and had promised to marry Mr. Drenan, of course I refused him. He seemed to be quite sorry, but in his genial way said:

"'Well, Martha, anyway, we can always be good friends.'

"And we were. I always thought a great deal of Abe, and hated to refuse him, but circumstances were such that I was almost compelled to.

"When he heard of our intention to remove to Texas Mr. Lincoln came over to our house on a visit and remained three days, trying his best to dissuade us. My maiden name was Matilda Wilson."

SHE GOT HER REWARD.

Encouraging to Promoters of Cooking Schools.

Potts had just returned from an extended trip abroad and was making his first call upon a young lady friend.

"My gracious, Miss Jennie, how you have changed! Why, you are a mere shadow of your former self. Aren't you well?"

"Well, no, Mr. Potts. You see, shortly after your departure I joined the cooking school, and there we are obliged to sample everything that we make. I am now a hopeless dyspeptic."

"How horrible! Really, I pity you from the bottom of my heart."

"You are very kind, Mr. Potts, but I feel positive that I shall reap my reward," and here the young lady blushed painfully.

"Reward? Really I do not comprehend."

Then, with a graceful flutter of clinging drapery, she crossed to his side, gave him a 'tis-leap-year expression, laid her left ear over his chest protector and gently murmured:

"Willie, dear, I can make biscuit such as your mother used to make."

With a wild cry of joy he took the trembling form in his great, strong arms, and their happiness was so intense that it could have been cut with a knife.—Cincinnati Times.

Hemp Ropes.

A German paper says a good hemp rope is hard, but pliant, yellowish or greenish, gray in color, with a certain silvery or pearly lustre. A dark or blackish color indicates that the hemp has suffered from fermentation in the process of curing, and brown spots show that the rope was spun while fibres were damp, and is consequently weak and soft in those places.

Again, sometimes a rope is made with inferior hemp on the inside, covered with yarns of good material, a fraud, however, which may be detected by dissecting a portion of the rope, or, in practiced hands, by its behavior in use.

Other inferior ropes are made with short fibres, or with strands of unequal strength or unevenly spun, the rope in the first case appearing woolly, on account of the number of ends of fibre projecting, and in the latter case the irregularity of manufacture is evident on inspection by any good judge.

Won an Easy Victory.

A jolly gentleman was drinking beer at the same table with three dissipated German students.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I'll order a bottle of wine for the biggest liar of you three."

"I deposited 20 marks yesterday in a savings bank," said the first.

"That's a pretty good lie."

"I am going to be able to pass my examination next session," said student No. 2.

"That's a whopper. Next."

The third student thought a moment and then said to the genial gentleman:

"You are going to lend me 20 marks."

The genial gentleman ordered the wine at once for the worst liar of the three.

HORSES WITH BOGUS TAILS.

Flowing Caudal Appendages from the Wigmaker's Establishment.

A stylish barouche drawn by two prancing horses drove out Walnut street recently. A well-known wigmaker was standing at Broad and Walnut streets talking to a Times reporter.

"Do you see that team?" said the wigmaker. "Well, do you see what beautiful flowing tails they've got? They're bogus."

The little wigmaker laughed aloud and then said:

"I make those tails. I make tails for a good many stylish horses. You know that a horse without a handsome tail isn't handsome at all. He may have a beautiful mane and hold his head high and stamp and prance and bite his bit, showing all the traits of a full-blooded animal, but if he hasn't got a long, flowing tail all the other characteristics go for nothing.

"There are a great many stylish steppers driven in the park every day that have false tails that sweep the ground. The horses get used to the false tails just as a man becomes accustomed to wearing a wig.

"The false tails are fastened on to the horse's own tail so nicely that you can't detect the deception. The tails don't have to be removed at night when the horse is put in his stall. The bogus tails can be washed and brushed and combed on the horse just as well as off him.

"The bogus tails cost from $10 to $15. I generally make a pair for $25. They will last as long as the horse. I buy dead horses' tails and manes just as I buy human hair. The practice of docking horses' tails is shocking."

"The practice is dying out; but a tail will never grow in like it was before it was cut short. The way to cultivate a horse's tail is to clip it about an inch once a month."—Philadelphia Times.

A Modern Miracle.

Mrs. J. W. Wentworth, of Elkhart, Ind., was bounced just to pieces in the side, shortness of breath, weakness, pain in the side, slight cough, swelling of the ankles and other symptoms of serious heart disease. She was expected to die at any time. Doctors in New York, Toledo, etc., failed to help her. But two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart cured her three years ago and she has remained well ever since. Heart disease can be cured. Sold by Baker & Hall.

HINT FOR THE GAY AND FESTIVE.

Eating Cheese for the Cure of Red Noses.

"I will give $500 to the man who will restore my nose to its natural color," said a well-dressed man in a down-town saloon on Saturday. Then, as if to give zest to his remark, he gulped down a big drink of whiskey, and, putting the glass down on the bar, he took a long and wistful look into the dim prospective of his life when his nasal organ was of the tinge it should be now.

"I don't know how it ever got so red," he continued, after ordering "a little of the same."

At this remark the bartender winked slyly at the man's companion and gave a significant glance at the empty glass on the bar.

A physician, who makes his headquarters in a Chestnut street drug store, was asked if there was any way in which a man could be cured of his red nose, and his answer was an emphatic "no."

"It is a bad thing to have a red nose," he said, "because most people think that it was brought about by whiskey drinking; and while this belief is justified in a majority of instances, it is not always the case.

"One of Philadelphia's most prominent men has a nose as red as a rooster's comb, and I know that he never drank a drop of liquor in his life. He will carry it with him to his grave.

"Cheese, if eaten frequently and in large quantities, will delay reddening of the nose, but if a man is a confirmed toper the whiskey and the cheese will have a tussle, and the whiskey will ultimately get there and fresco the nose for him in the most approved style."—Philadelphia Press.

Professional Ignorance

Nothing is more common, nor less true, than for physicans to tell patients in the first stages of heart disease that the trouble is only nervous, etc., and of no account. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing as shown by the great number of people who die of heart disease when its existense is not expected. Take warning. Don't neglect the first symptoms, and if you would avoid sudden death, angina pectoris, etc., take Dr. Miles' New Cure before it is too late. Sold at Baker & Hall's drug store.

MORRISTOWN, TENN., July 4, 1888.

The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:

Gentlemen—Five years ago I was so unfortunate as to contract an extremely bad case of blood poison. My bones ached and my muscles began to swell and contract. I was under treatment of the physician from the inception of the disease until I found that he could do me no good. Then, through the advice of a friend I began taking S. S. S. Your medicine seemed to have an immediate effect. I took six bottles, and today am sound and well. That was over three years ago, but I have seen no evidence of the return of the disease, and I take this opportunity to thank you for what it has done for me. It saved my life. You can refer any one to me. R. M. WATT.

GOT THE BEST OF THE DOCTOR.

W. F. Beyer, Garretsville, Ohio, says: "My wife has been troubled with Catarrh a long time, but have, with what remedies we had, and what the doctor could do, kept the upper hand of it until this fall, when everything failed. Her throat was raw as far as one could see, with an incessant cough, when I invested my dollar in a bottle of your Papillon Catarrh Cure as a last resort. To-day she is free from cough, throat all healed and entirely cured." Papillon (extract of flax) Catarrh Cure effects cures when all others fail. Large bottles $1.00.

A PACK OF CARDS.

What a Soldier Found Suggested by This Familiar Thing.

Once, while a company of soldiers were at church the captain noticed that one of the men had a deck of cards which he was looking over and seemed to be studying closely.

After service the soldier was placed under arrest, and ordered to give an account of what he meant by displaying a deck of cards during church service.

The soldier thereupon explained as follows:

"The ace reminds there is but one God; the deuce of the Father and Son; the trey of the Holy Trinity; the four-spot of the four Evangelists—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John; the five-spot of the five wise and five foolish virgins; the six-spot that in six days God made the world; the seven spot that He rested on the seventh day from his labors; the eight-spot of the eight persons that entered the ark—Noah, his wife, and their three sons and their wives; the nine-spot of the lepers cleansed by God, only one of whom was grateful; the ten-spot reminds me of the ten commandments."

He then showed how the cards served him as a calendar:

"By counting the spots," he said, "I find there are three hundred and sixty-five—the number of days in the year; by counting the cards, there are fifty-two—the number of weeks in a year. Of suits, there are four—the number of seasons in each year; there are thirteen cards in each suit, and there are thirteen weeks in each quarter."

The explanation being satisfactory the soldier was released.

Homeless Fugitives.

THE PLAGUE AT JACKSONVILLE KY.

Jackson and Decatur Almost Deserted—A Rigid Quarantine Aghinst Any Further Ravages—Scenes in Jacksonville—Reign of the Plague—A Slight Unpleasantness Among the Relief People—An Electric Remedy—List of the Dead and Stricken.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 24.—A special to The American yesterday from Decatur, Ala., says: "Friday has been the gloomiest Sunday in Decatur's history, the sun even refusing its cheerful light to the small crowds at the street corners or on the station platform watching the trains fly by them. There are hardly more than 150 people in the town, and two-thirds of these are colored. The special train with about fifty refugees left about midnight last night. It is scarcely probable that any more will be permitted to leave. There were but two cases and no death to-day—cheering news were it not that so little remains for the scourge to feed upon itself on. One of to-day's cases is Dr. W. C. Buckley, one of the best physicians in Decatur. Total cases to date, 87; total deaths, 4, as follows: A. D. Spencer, Dr. Bowman, W. L. Prince and O. S. Kibbey.

"The Bismark hotel is still open and feeding all that apply, whether they have money to pay or not. Two restaurants here are doing the same. The Western Union manager, S. D. Armstrong, has never left his post except for sleep. Joseph T. Dixon, city editor of The Free Lance, is still here. Only two physicians have left. Both of them left on account of scrumps. The city is well provided with both physicians and nurses, and all who left the city have left their places in order."

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 24.—A refugee from Decatur, Ala., stated to a United Press reporter last night that the rapid depopulation of Decatur was partially due to the fact that a majority of the white residents of that city were unacclimated northern mechanics, who would be particularly susceptible to the ravages of the dread epidemic. Rapid depopulation is encouraged, and the indigent are furnished transportation.

Operator Armstrong, of Decatur, stated, over the Louisville wire, at midnight Saturday night, that one of the crowd of refugees while waiting for the special train furnished by the Louisville & Nashville road, was stricken with fever, and at that hour was lying on the platform unattended. He also expressed the opinion that other cases would develop while the train was en route to Louisville. The Courier Journal's special reports 25 cases at Decatur, with a total of 10 deaths to date up to Saturday night. There are no nurses to be had, and the drug stores have been abandoned. The undertaker stated that he could not get wagons to the graves for yellow fever victims, those who have been buried are only a foot or two under ground, and if deaths continue to occur it will be difficult to bury the victims.

The city authorities have resolved to receive all refugees who come, and Louisville will keep open house for the unfortunate. About 500 have arrived here up to last night, many of them destitute. About half of them left for Cincinnati this morning.

THE TRAFFIC OF DEATH.

All That Is Visible on the Streets of Jacksonville—The Death Roll.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 24.—Special to The Picayune from Jacksonville gives the following facts: A funeral scene reigned yesterday. No church bells told us it was Sunday—in fact the only thing to indicate the day was that there were not so many negroes on the streets and around the commissary rooms as at other times. The traffic on the streets consisted of doctors' gigs and hearses. Yesterday morning's report seemed more favorable than Saturday morning's. There was even a little encouragement gleaned from the fact that Saturday's death rate was low, though there were more cases than ever before.

There were 53 new cases reported yesterday, 30 of whom are colored, and 10 deaths—Manel Thomas, Mrs. Seether, Louis Bruner, Judge Whitney, C. Smith, G. F. Howe, W. Z. Simmons, Mrs. Smith, Rev. W. P. Ross (colored) pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist church, and Georgiana Brewington. Total cases to date, 1,878; total deaths, 232. Saturday the new cases numbered 163, with six deaths, as follows: Jimmie Thompson, George Bradlock, Louis Bremer, Charles G. Elliott, George B. Brooks and Mr. Christopher.

Among the new cases are Capt. William Somerville and Dr. Eddy, of the visiting physicians. Rev. Dr. William H. Dodge, of the Southern Presbyterian church, one of the most devoted heroes of the epidemic, was stricken down Saturday. He was more comfortable last night, though quite ill. There was a strong, dry east wind yesterday. A more hopeful feeling exists, and many intelligent observers of former epidemics believe that the worst is over.

A special from McClenny says there were two new cases yesterday and one death—that of Glenn Shay. Miss Mollie McCall is very low. A train load of supplies was sent from here to McClenny.

The inventor of a healing process called the electro-induction cure of which nobody seems to know the nature, claims to have cured J. J. Dawson, a printer, who was attacked by the fever Friday night, and after treatment went to sleep and awoke free from fever. There are scores of alleged proven cures, but this is the only known case of an apparent cure so far. The regular physicians condemn such experiments, and deny that any good can come of unscientific treatment.

Dr. Porter found it necessary to send the following dispatch Saturday night to Miss Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross association at Washington: "You will confer a favor on me by withdrawing Southmayd. He is a nuisance to me in my official capacity in command of the government nurses."

This conclusion was reached after a misunderstanding in the first place between Col. Southmayd and the authorities on account of the action of the board of health in regard to incompetent and immoral nurses. This action Southmayd resented so persistently that Dr. Porter felt the annoyance entire than he could bear.

Dr. Porter received a message from Miss Clara Barton last evening saying: "Your order obeyed. Col. Southmayd will be withdrawn." Col. Southmayd was seen last evening, but was very reticent about the matter. He claimed that his nurses (those sent from New Orleans) were treated unjustly in being sent back without due trial. He added that he had sent a complaint to Washington in regard to the matter.

It has been demonstrated that negroes are as susceptible to attack as the whites, but the issue is rarely fatal with them unless the fever is complicated with organic diseases. An eminent local physician said: "Negroes never die of yellow fever unless they are in a dissolute."

The board of health has passed resolutions asking Congress to appoint a medical commission to come here and make a scientific study of the cause, means of propagation and remedy for the disease.

A BURNT CHILD DREADS FIRE.

Memphis Lets No One from the Fever District Come Near Her.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 24.—Saturday the city authorities adopted regulations requiring passenger trains on any of the railways east of the Mississippi, coming nearer to Memphis than ten miles. A passenger train was stopped at Lake View Saturday, which were all people, mostly women, and children, who had hurriedly left New Orleans, Grenada, Greenville, and other points. They were not fleeing from the fever, but had been sent away to avoid the stampede that would follow if a case should appear at any of those places. The scene there was truly pitiable. Many of the women were unaccompanied by their husbands, who had remained behind, and with their little ones were utterly helpless. The coaches were crowded almost to suffocation, and many of the women and children were unable to secure seats. Their baggage had all been checked to Memphis, and time could not be spared to have it rechecked at Lake View, so that all the baggage was left behind, and will have to be forwarded at some future time. The passengers were sent on north, guards being stationed to prevent any of them getting off the train.

PUTTING UP THEIR FENCES.

The Fever Puts an Embargo on Train Service—Quarantine Notes.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 24.—A special from Meridian, Miss., to The Picayune says:

"The board of health Saturday ordered all trains stopped. None will be allowed to pass through Meridian hereafter. There is no fever here and no suspicious cases. The object of stopping the trains is to keep the disease away."

A Cairo special says that the Mobile & Ohio railroad will take no freight for Mississippi points, as they can not deliver it because of quarantine. Illinois Central trains run through from New Orleans to Canton, Miss., north of Jackson, without stoppage. Local trains on both roads between New Orleans and Jackson are abandoned.

The Picayune and The Times-Democrat have received specials from almost every village and hamlet in Mississippi, which there is a telegraph office, all of which show that a "shotgun quarantine" has been established. The following dispatch from Columbus is given as a sample: "The excitement here is intense and growing all the time. Reports of fever in various places have been current all day."

DARK AND DREARY AT JACKSON.

The Town Almost Depopulated and Hemmed in to Its Fate.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 24.—A special to The Times-Democrat from Jackson, Miss., says:

A dark dreary morning, with a deserted city, made this place gloomy beyond description yesterday. The quarantine officers moved briskly around, and seemed the only persons endowed with energy. The well-to-do populace have almost entirely departed. The quarters occupied by the laboring class and negroes are still well peopled. Those remaining now are hemmed in, as every town has been quarantined against Jackson.

The outlook is more favorable. The official report shows only one new case—Joe Summers, a negro, four miles from town—and two deaths, David Hippeard and J. A. Calhoun, both of whom worked on the Illinois Central railroad. Total cases to date, 14; total deaths, 5.

[illegible] Cases that Are Suspected.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 24.—A special to The Dispatch from Greenville, Ala., and many private telegrams deny that there is any yellow fever there. The Greenville board of health came to the conclusion, after thoroughly examining the case of C. B. Parkhill, from Pensacola, that there is no ground for calling it yellow fever. The man is doing well, and other reports say that he is up and all right. Dr. W. H. Ross, of Pensacola, telegraphs to the board of health at Greenville: "C. B. Parkhill has been down with dengue fever and relapse. No yellow fever in Pensacola." The mayor of Selma telegraphs the mayor of Montgomery that the telegraph operator at Selma learned from the Meridian, Miss., operator of several suspicious cases and great excitement there.

A Generous Chicago Bootblack.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Horace Davenport is the proprietor of a prosperous bootblacking stand at 6 Pacific avenue, just south of Jackson street, and has a number of assistants, all of whom are kept busy pretty much all the day. Actuated by a desire to assist in the relief of the stricken southern sufferers, he has announced that the gross receipts of his stand from this morning to next Saturday evening will be given to help swell the worthy fund for charity.

Relieved the Famishing Passengers.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 24.—A special to The American from Martin, Tenn., says two trains of yellow fever refugees passed through there Saturday, going north and were allowed to stop a mile north of town, where loads of provisions were furnished by the citizens, some of the passengers having gone forty-eight hours without food.

THE FLAGSHIP HARTFORD.

No Action To Be Taken on the Bill to Repair the Vessel.

WASHINGTON City, Sept. 22.—Senator Hale said Friday that the senate naval committee had decided to take no action on the bill appropriating $100,000 to repair the old flagship Hartford. The committee, he said, was opposed to putting such a large sum into a vessel which, when completed, would be of no use. Such vessels as the Hartford were as totally unfit for present use as was the Indian canoe in the days of the Hartford's prime. The committee did not think it wise to throw such a sum away on sentiment. They preferred rather to recommend to the senate that all money be spent in building up a navy that would be of service in time of war in competing with the great navies of the world.

One million spindles in the Lancashire, England, mills, have begun running on short time, the object being to defeat the American cotton ring.

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A capital story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD, both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

Dr. Bliss and other eminent medical men speak in the highest terms of Speer's Wines. Dr. Bliss prescribes these wines in his practice, whenever wines are necessary. The following is part of a letter received by Mr. Speer:

"I have been greatly pleased with your N. J. Wines, and specially so with the Claret, Burgundy and Port. I wish you to send me two cases of your Claret and one of Burgundy. Also, two cases of Claret and one of Burgundy to my niece Miss—New York City, and send the bill of both orders to me.

Yours truly,
D. W. BLISS M. D.

A PECULIAR TEMPTATION.

It Was Yielded to with Certain Amusing Consequences.

A large well-dressed man strolled into a commission house. He had an air of culture and seemed to be pondering over the limitless possibilities of human life.

A bushel basket of eggs stood near the door. They were not necessarily strictly fresh, nor even fresh, simply plain every-day-in-the-week eggs.

The stranger gazed at the eggs. He lifted his foot, and let it down firmly with commendable resolution on top of the eggs. Then he tried to crush the eggs and with no inconsiderable success. The proprietor rushed out.

"See here, what in the name of the seven devils are you doing?"

"Oh, I only wanted to see how it would seem to stand on this basket of eggs," said the man calmly.

"You'll settle for this before you leave here," was the reply of the irate merchant.

"I haven't any objection," he said, producing a well-filled wallet and paying in full for the damage.

Then with a thoughtful mien and philosophic countenance such as proceeds from the Concord scholars, the well-dressed man departed.

Food for Thought.

One of those shoppers known as "tasters," who chew calico to see if the colors are fast, went into a prominent drygoods store on the avenue.

Approaching the calico counter she inquired of the clerk:

"Have you any blue-striped calico on a red ground?"

The clerk, who knew his customer, answered politely:

"Not a mouthful."

"A Great Newspaper."

Under the above caption the New York Graphic, [illegible] years ago, published a critical review of the growth of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS, which sets forth so clearly some of the fundamental principles underlying the development of one of the phenomenal successes of later years that it will well repay a reading. To bring some of the Graphic's figures down to the present date, supplemental statements are parenthetically added by the present writer.

"THE newspaper entitled to the distinction of having the largest daily circulation in America is THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS. (Since this statement was made it is possible that the growth of the New York World entitles it to first place.) The Graphic to-day devotes a page to sketches of scenes in and about its establishment. The history of this paper is probably without a parallel in the annals of American journalism. It was founded December 20th, 1875, and was the first low-priced daily successfully established in the West. At the end of its first year it had achieved a circulation of about 10,000. From that time on its growth has been remarkable. It now prints seven editions daily, comprising both morning and evening issues. Its statement of circulation for the year 1884 shows a daily average of 125,178 copies, unquestionably the largest daily circulation on the American continent. (The sworn statement for 1887 shows a daily average of 165,376.)

"In politics THE DAILY NEWS is always independent, never neutral. While its editoral expression is sometimes vigorous to the degree of severity, there is always in its utterances of opinion so manifest a purpose to be impartial and fair to all opposing interests, that it rarely loses the confidence of the reader, however much it may fail to bring him to an acceptance of its own view concerning the matter in hand.

"As a newspaper proper, THE DAILY NEWS has earned a reputation for enterprising news-gathering second to none in the United States. It is the only cheap paper in the West that is a member of the Associated Press. It gives its readers all the news worth giving and gives it for two cents. (Now it does it for one cent a day.)

"Aside from its own deserving merits as a complete and cheap newspaper, it is doubtless much indebted for its remarkable growth in circulation to the persistent adherence on the part of the other Chicago dailies to the "blanket-sheet" style of journalism. Of all the people in America the average Chicagoan is most in a hurry and least inclined to wade through columns of verbiage and stuff. THE DAILY NEWS is the only Chicago daily that has the facilities for giving all the news, and at the same time the good sense to present it in concise form. The result of such a condition of affairs is that THE DAILY NEWS prints more papers than all the other Chicago dailies combined.

"In considering all the causes which have entered into and produced so phenomenal a journalistic growth the most important one unquestionably has been the controlling conviction of its managers that the "cheap paper" should be cheap only in price; that its news should be as fresh and complete, its editorial discussion as able, and its general tone and character as pure and heathful as its best and highest priced cotemporary. All this the "cheap paper" may easily be even at its reduced price.

"The difference of revenue between the two-cent paper (even more so when the price is one cent), and the higher-priced "blanket-sheet," the latter throws away in useless and unasked for size, that not only is of no worth to the reader, but is even an annoyance, in that it compels him to gleam what is of real news interest from a mass of verbiage and worthless amplication.

"It is because its managers have been wise enough to practically recognize these essential elements of the best American journalism of to-day that THE DAILY NEWS is the best and most popular general family newspaper published in Chicago or the West."

It seems hardly possible that an endorsement of merit could be framed in stronger terms than the foregoing analysis, and yet how much greater is not the achievement now that such a journal as THE DAILY NEWS is placed in every man's hands at the reduced price of ONE CENT A DAY.

The truly marvelous enterprise of American journalism can hardly go farther. Certain it is that THE DAILY NEWS lead the van.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is sold by all newsdealers at One Cent per copy, or it will be mailed, postage paid, for $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month. The attention of farmers is especially called to the fact that this metropolitan daily now costs but little more than the old time weekly. The shrewd farmer will now have his daily market reports. HELP THE CAUSE OF REFORM.

The Democratic National Committee have issued an appeal for contributions to meet the expenses of the campaign. They cannot "fry the fat" out of the manufacturing barons. "Hubbellism" is a thing of the past, and they cannot bleed the office holders. Hence they must rely on voluntary contributions. But the responses to the appeal are most encouraging, and they represent all classes of people. Laboring men, professional men and business men are all sending their quota and the committee is not likely to lack for necessary funds. Among the incidents showing how liberally the people are responding is the following taken from an exchange:

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—At noon today a medium-sized man, with dark hair and mustache and dressed in a business man's attire, ran up the brownstone steps leading into the national democratic headquarters, and requested an assistant sergeant-at-arms to direct him to Chairman Brice's room. He was escorted up stairs, and when he stood in front of the red-headed political organizer from Ohio, he drew a plain envelope from a pocket, and, as he extended the hand holding it, he said:

"Mr. Brice, here is a little contribution to continue a national blessing in Grover Cleveland's retention in the Presidential chair. The country has never seen a better President, and, as a good citizen, I wish to contribute my mite to the education of the people on the issues of the campaign."

As Chairman Brice received the envelope the man turned and walked away. The former, removing the enclosure, found to his surprise that it was a yellow backed one thousand dollar note.

"Hold on!" he shouted after the retreating figure, "give us your name please."

"Never mind that," said the stranger, waving a hand in farewell, "simply credit it to 'A friend of a good cause.'" Then he lightly bounded down stairs and disappeared without leaving the slightest trace of his identity.

LOG CABIN SUCCESS.

What ails the young men? Robert Garret's father left him a fortune of twenty millions. He was from childhood reared in luxury; he received a splendid education with an especial training into a thorough knowledge of railroad management and was expected to succeed his father as a railroad king.

Within three years after the responsibilities which his father's death threw upon him were assumed, he is reported as a broken down man, with mind and health permanently shattered.

George Law is another young man left with millions of money, who is reported among the "wrecks." His father, bred a stone mason, was of gigantic size and strength, with commensurate brain power, so he became a great contractor, then a railroad king and left half a dozen millions for his son to dissipate. The young man is a success as a dissipator.

The founders of both of these great estates were born in the most humble walks of life, grew strong, mentally and physically, by simple living and honest labor and developed into financial giants. Their sons were reared in the lap of luxury and developed into intellectual pigmies.

The great men of our country have not, as a rule, come from the elegant mansions of the cities, but from the Log Cabins of the rural districts. Simple ways of living, freedom from dissipation and enervating pleasures, simple remedies for diseases, effective and which leave no poison in the system, develop brawny, brainy men, who compel the world to recognize their strength and power.

The wholesome, old-fashioned Log Cabin remedies are safest and surest for family use. Our grandmothers knew how to prepare herbs and syrups of roots, barks and balsams which drive diseases out of the system by natural methods and leave no after effects. The most potent of these old time remedies were, after long and searching investigation, secured by H. H. Warner of safe cure fame, and not put out for the "healing of the nations" in the Warner's Log Cabin remedies.

Regulate the regulator with Warner's Log Cabin sarsaparilla and with pure blood giving health, strength, mental and bodily vigor, you may hope to cope successfully with the most gigantic financial problems of the age, without wrecking health and manhood.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, OCT. 4

The Republican majority in the Senate are now spending their valuable time in trying to solve the problem "How not to do it."

If the Protective Tariff or taxes raises and keeps up wages, why should not wages be equal and alike every where in the United States?

Reduce the war taxes. Wipe out the surplus. Every voter in Lenawee county, if true to his own interest, would stand on this platform.

Of the candidates for President this year Cleveland is the biggest, Harrison is the shortest, General Fisk is the handsomest, Streeter is the wealthiest and Belva Lockwood is the sweetest. Now take your choice.

The Evening News will publish during October sixteen articles on the tariff question, eight by Frank Hurd on the free trade side and eight for a high tariff by Ben Butterworth. These articles will be worth reading.

The tariff agitation occasioned by the Mills bill was the cause of the stagnation of business during the summer, the high tariff organs tell us. Then the passage of the Mills bill must be the cause of the improvement in business this fall.

The farewell banquet given to the new Chief Justice was the grandest affair of the kind ever witnessed in the Garden City. Judge Drummond, the chairman, in his remarks paid this tribute to Justice Fuller:

"He is a man who has gone out and in among us for more than thirty years with an untarnished name, with a moral character which even malice could not sully. Even his opponents, out of self-respect, were compelled to abandon their attack at once."

Gen. Harrison would keep up the war taxes and use the surplus to purchase bonds and thus give the bond holder a bonus of from 30 to 50 per cent on his investment. President Cleveland would wipe out the war taxes and leave the surplus in the pockets of the people where it belongs. Choose ye between them.

If the rate of wages in the United States is due to the Protective Tariff, why is it, for instance, official reports show that farm laborers receive monthly wages, with board, ranging from $16 in Maine to $27 in Colorado and $23 in California; and from $8 per month in South Carolina to $16 in Ohio, $17 in Minnesota, and $24 in Oregon?

The "condition" which called out President Cleveland's message still confronts us. The treasury surplus on the 31st of August was $133,000,000 and this surplus is growing at the rate of ten millions a month. No bonds will become due until 1892 and they will then be met by the ordinary sinking fund. Bonds are being purchased now at a ruinous discount to save the country from a financial panic.

Trusts are private affairs with which neither the President nor anybody else has any particular right to interfere. So says Mr. Blaine. But larceny is a private affair—usually a very private affair—and yet it is not supposed to be improper to interfere with it by law. The robber who meets a man on the public road and demands his money or his life is engaged in a private enterprise, but the law takes cognizance of his act and punishes it as a crime. So the laws of this country will do with trusts.

The official returns from the Maine election are now at hand and they are decidedly encouraging to the friends of reform. They show the following vote: Republican 79,904; democratic, 61,349; labor, 1,526; prohibition, 3,121; scattering, 15. Total vote, 145,815. The republican plurality is only 18,555 and the majority 13,393. At the September election in 1884 the vote was as follows: Republican, 77,779; democrat, 58,070; greenback labor, 3,147; prohibition, 1,157; scattering, 283. Total vote, 140,436. The democrats have increased their vote 3,279 and the republicans 1,625. The republican gain as compared with the September vote of 1884 is nearly 2 1-10 per ct. The Democratic gain is almost 5 7-10 per ct. A proportionate gain in New York would give that state to Cleveland by over 21,000 plurality; Indiana by over 15,000 New Jersey by about 9,000; Connecticut by 3,700, and Michigan by 3,400.

A FEW MORE QUESTIONS.

The following questions were sent to the Detroit Evening News by a Michigan workingman. If any of our protection readers can answer them the use of our columns will be granted for that purpose.

To the Editor: Being a workingman myself, and, though fully realizing that I am not expected to do a great deal of thinking or reasoning, still, having, like many other working people probably, considerable leisure, my mind naturally reverts to the "why" of the situation. Through the column of The News, therefore, I would very respectfully ask some of those people who profess such a love for the workingman, and to whom 'tis given to understand and appreciate, and to be able to explain matters pertaining to governmental policy, and especially to those which immediately interest the laborer or wage earner, to spare me a few moments of their time, in answer to my perhaps presumptuous questions. While they may shed a little light on an ignorant and benighted soul, they may incidentally confer a favor on the object of their prayers and solicitude, the workingman generally:

1. If a policy of unrestrained or unrestricted commerce is destructive to the best interests of a nation, why is it that England, a little isolated island, hardly larger than the state of Michigan, and containing less than 90,000 square miles, limited in climate and natural resources, is able to dominate the commerce of the world?

2. If a policy of restriction is conducive to the prosperity of a country, why is it that the United States with an area of 5,000,000 of square miles, embracing within their limits the arctic and the tropic regions, with wonderful national resources and advantages, together with the most enterprising people on the globe, and encouraged by all the alleged manifold blessings of a protective tariff, cuts such a sorry figure upon the commercial highway of the world?

3. Why is it, if protection is such an incentive to industry, that, in our carrying trade, the proportion done by American bottoms has dwindled down from 75 per cent in 1856 to 14 per cent in 1887?

4. Why is it, after a long period of protection, with our 10,000 miles or more of seaboard, that our merchant marine once the pride and boast of America, under a low tariff has become a thing of the past, and all we have to recall the memory of our gallant tars is an old rattletrap of a navy and the pleasure yachts of our millionaires?

5. Why is it no object to America—pre eminently a producing country, and constantly producing so much more than we can consume—to court the trade and favor of countries which consume so much more and produce so much less in proportion?

6. Admitting as true the claim of the Hon. Mr. McKinley—undoubtedly the ablest of the champions of protection—that we have the best market in the world, is that any reason or argument that we should not have a still better one?

7. If the object of protection is to ameliorate the condition of the laborer and enhance his profits, why is it, after a quarter of a century of protection in our country, that we find wages constantly decreasing, and strikes, lockouts and tramps correspondingly increasing?

8. If the proposition is true that protection is a benefit to labor generally in the United States, why won't it apply equally as well to China, where they are protected not only by a tariff but also by a high wall, and work for almost nothing a day, and live on rats and rice?

9. If a comparative free trade policy is ruinous to the laborer, why is it, that England, with a population of about 280 souls to the square mile, pays larger wages than any protected nation on the globe, America excepted, and that New South Wales, with a policy similar to England, pays her working people as well as America?

10. Why will friends and advocates of a high protective tariff persist in calling it the "American system," when they have had similar laws in China for over three hundred years? In strict propriety and all honesty it should be called the 'Chinese system.'

11. Why is it that the laboring classes will complain of hard times, when evidences of prosperity are so numerous around them, and you can refer them to millionaires by the score and by the hundred?

12. Why does the poor, ignorant and benighted workman prate about "class legislation," when he has been the main object of a beneficent and patriotic tariff law for a quarter of a century?

13. While you are protecting us from the pauper labor of Europe, would it not be well enough to give a little heed that your legislation does not make us paupers at the rate of over 200,000 or 300,000 per year?

14. Are the Gould, the Mortons, the Scotts, the Algers, the McMillins, the Standfords, and the thousand and one millionaires of America, evidences of the prosperity of the country generally, or are they rather evidences of sharp and ingenious practice by individuals in taking advantage of rather elastic class legislation?

15. If your love for the workingman your christian like and unselfish interest in his welfare, so permeates and occupies your whole nature, so inspires your very soul, then, in the name of goodness, why don't you offer us something more tangible than your mere assurance? S. F. PAYNE.

Saranac, Mich., July 28, 1888.

THE "UNFELT BURDEN."

The following practical lesson in the rudiments of tariff reform is given that the people may realize just how completely the tariff taxation enters into and increases the cost upon every article of household use:

If a young man buys a suit of clothes for $23, the amount of protection he pays for is $9.00. The clothes without protection would cost $14.

If he buys a $1 hat he gets 40 cents worth of hat and 60 cents worth of protection.

If a young couple just beginning housekeeping buy a yard of Brussels carpet for $1 they receive 45 cents in carpet and 55 cents in protection—or say for a whole room $30 worth of carpet and $15 worth of protection.

If the young woman pays $9 for a shawl she gets $6.00 worth of shawl only; the other $3 she presents to the manufacturer to "protect" him.

If she buys a dress for $18 she gets $12 worth of dress and $6 worth of protection.

If, however, she wants a pair of shoes, which formerly cost $4.50 to $5.50, she has only to pay $2.50 or $3.50 according to quality, because some of the "protection" has been taken off hides from which the leather in the shoe is made.

If she pays 58 cents for an iron pot or pan she gets 30 cents in goods and 20 cents worth of protection.

If she buys a clock for $3.00 she receives $2 worth of clock and $1 worth of protection.

If she wants a sewing machine and pays $20 for it she gets $11 worth of sewing machine and $9 worth of protection.

If she pays $16 for a watch $12 represents the timepiece; the other $4.00 goes to "protect" somebody.

If she buys a lamp for $1 there is 55 cents in the lamp and 45 cents to keep the pot boiling for some protected individual.

If she has to buy a range or stove for $27 she gets $17 in goods and $8 worth of protection.

If she buys a dozen steel knives and forks for $3.50 she gets about $2.00 in knives and $1.50 in protection.

If she buys a dozen glass tumblers for $1 she receives in glass 55 cents and 45 cents in tariff.

If a young farmer buys $100 worth of implements to start out in farming he gets $55 in implements and $45 in tariff wind pudding.—New York Graphic.

THE WAGES DELUSION.

The Tribune has another of its long and meaningless statistical articles solemnly proving what nobody denies—namely, that wages are higher in this country than in the Old World and that they have increased since 1860.

Our sunshine is brighter and more constant, our soil is richer, our mountains are taller and our rivers longer than those of England; our women are more beautiful and bright and our children more irrepressible than those of that country. But these things were so before the tariff was thought of, just as wages were higher.

The Tribune has admitted that "wages are and always have been higher in this comparatively new country than in older and more crowded countries." Will it admit or deny that they are higher because the country is new and the demand for labor is greater?

Dare it take issue with Mr. Blaine in his official assertion that "undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor?"

Will it go back upon or venture to explain its own tables showing a greater difference in wages in the same industries in different States of the Union, "protected" by the same tariff and exposed to Free Trade between themselves than exists between wages here and in England?

Wages depend upon the demand for labor, its productiveness, its organization and the cost of living. Intelligent workingmen know this. The ignorant are learning it.—N. Y. World.

It is a blind confidence to suppose yourself incapable of mistake. It is indeed a serious blunder to refuse to take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup when you even suspect you have taken cold. Price 25 cents.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs L. S. Pickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

The blood is the regulator. Regulate the Regulator with Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla. It cures all impurities. It is the largest bottle in the market—120 doses for $1. Your druggist sells it. Buy it for your family's benefit as well as your own.

THE TRIANGLE CARTOONS,

THE WORKINGMAN'S FRIEND.

GENERAL HARRISON.—"One Dollar a Day is enough for any Laboring Man."

JOHN CHINAMAN.—"Hollay for Hallison."

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.—"The experiment of blending the social habits and natural race idiosyncrasies of the Chinese laboring classes with those of the great body of the people of the United States have been proved by the experience of 20 years to be in every sense unwise, unpolitic and injurious to both nations."

AMERICAN WORKMEN.—"Three Cheers for Grover."

FORGED PARTY CLAP-TRAP.

The following forged utterances are now widely circulated by political knaves, who always assume that the people are fools:

Grover Cleveland has done more to advance the cause of free trade than any Prime Minister of England has ever done.—London Spectator.

The only time England can use an Irishman is when he emigrates to America and votes for free trade.—London Times.

The Cobden Club is trying to raise a large sum of money to be spent in furthering the free trade propaganda in the United States. Lord Brassey has given £1,000, others less, and the hat is going round.—English Iron Era.

I believe in free trade as I believe in the Protestant religion.—Grover Cleveland.

All of these falsehoods have been disproven. As to the first the London Spectator itself denies the charge. The Times has stated that the second charge is a forgery. The third extract was not published in the London Iron Era at all, but in a paper of the same name in this country, a sheet sustained by the iron barons. Lord Brassey himself has denied the charge. President Cleveland has denied the fourth charge, over his own signature. The small fry Republican newspapers however are still publishing this clap-trap forgery, on the theory, we suppose, that a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth.

Is Consumption Incurable?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark, says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

What is a Protective Tariff but a high Tax paid by the consumer?

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years; I had lost sense of smell entirely for the last fifteen years, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as a fine a needle as ever I did. My sense of smell is partly restored and it seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh. Mrs. E. E. President's Proclamation.

SPECIAL.

Whereas, From day to day vast numbers are being stricken down with the fell disease Rheumatism, which seems to be greatly on the increase.

And whereas, The nation has within a short time been called upon to mourn the sudden loss of many of our public men, such as Vice-President Hendricks, Gen. John A. Logan, Sec'y Daniel P. Manning, Gen. McClellan, a Secretary others.

Now therefore, I do by virtue of the knowledge possessed by me, proclaim and recommend Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup to be a remedy of great merit, both for Rheumatism and all Blood Diseases.

And further, That this medicine be adopted as a national remedy by all.

Signed by the President.

RHEUMATISM.

I was cut in the wrist by a broken bottle from which I suffered extreme pain. I called a doctor, who pronounced it sciatic rheumatism. My right side became paralyzed, leg and arm badly withered, and my joints were so stiff that there was but little action in them. About six weeks ago I began taking Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup with marvelous results. Since then I have left off the use of crutches entirely, and only use a cane, and for the past few days I often forget it and walk without any aid. To say that it has greatly benefited me but poorly expresses my idea of your Rheumatic Syrup.

INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.

How He Went Back on His Own Proposition.

THE EXCLUSION BILL APPROVED.

Some Excellent Reasons Given by the President for the Measure, Showing That "for Ways That Are Dark," Etc.—A Celestial Statesman Has Some Plans of Retaliation, in Which Our Coal Oil Is to Suffer—Views at 'Frisco.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 2.—In announcing to congress his approval of the Chinese exclusion bill yesterday the president sent in a special message giving his reasons for approval. The substance of the document is, that the treaty which China has just rejected because of certain amendments added by the senate, was the product of a full and friendly understanding between the two governments; that the exclusion of Chinese from this country was in no sense objected to by the Chinese government, which, on the contrary, announced that it proposed to prevent Chinese emigration to America by law on its own account. Neither, the president thinks, were the amendments added to the treaty by the senate of such character as to justify the rejection of the treaty, as these amendments had been submitted to the Chinese plenipotentiary and approved by him. It transpires, the president says, that the real reason for the rejection was not the amendments, but dissatisfaction on the part of the Chinese government with the clause providing that the question of return of Chinese laborers shall be decided by their possession of certificates from the American collectors. This the Chinese government desires to have changed to the Chinese consul, which would place the matter entirely out of our control. The president then says:

The a limited and paramount right and duty of every government to exclude from its borders all elements of foreign population which for any reason regarded as prosperity or are detrimental to the moral and physical health of its people, must be regarded as a recognized canon of international law and intercourse. China herself has not dissented from this doctrine, but has, by the expressions to which I have referred, led us confidently to rely upon such action on her part in co-operation with us as would enforce the exclusion of Chinese laborers from our country. This co-operation has not, however, been accorded us. Thus, from the unexpected and disappointing refusal of the Chinese government to confirm the acts of its authorized agents, and to carry into effect an international agreement, the main feature of which was voluntarily proposed by that government for our acceptance, and which had been the subject of long and careful deliberation, an emergency has arisen in which the government of the United States is called upon to act in self defense by the exercise of its legislative power. I can not but regard the expressed demand on the part of China for a reexamination and renewed discussion of the topics so completely covered by mutual treaty stipulations as an indefinite postponement and practical abandonment of the objects we have in view, to which the government of China may justly be considered as pledged.

The president adds that the bill should provide for the admission into the country, under treaties heretofore in operation, of those Chinese who had left their own country previous to these complications resulting in the present action, as any other course would be manifestly unjust. He also recommends the passage of an appropriation to indemnify Chinese who have suffered at the hands of mobs—not acknowledging legal liability therefor, but because we have expressed our willingness to do so in a spirit of amicability.

CHINESE RETALIATION TALK.

A Proposition to Shut Out Our Coal Oil as a Dangerous Substance.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—China, or at least some of the officials of China, wish to retaliate for American Chinese restriction laws by laws prohibiting the importation of American kerosene into China. Chang Chi-tung, viceroy of Canton, has addressed a memorial to the emperor, in which he arraigns kerosene as the greatest menace to the peace and prosperity of the empire. It burned up 400 houses in Swatow not long ago, he says, and just before that it destroyed a steamer and cost 800 people their lives. Soon afterward it burned 1,000 houses in Canton and destroyed $10,000,000 worth of property. It is responsible, he says, for nine-tenths of the fires that occur every winter in Canton. He declares that it has done incalculable injury to life and property, that it is worse than opium, being most swift and terrible in its deadliness; and that it has almost destroyed the native industry in peanut, colzor and bean oils. On account of its evil deeds the viceroy says that he did his best last year to kill the trade in kerosene by raising the inland transit duties on it, but the fell destroyer was too subtile to be driven out by this process, and the evil was increasing rather than diminishing. Therefore the viceroy now petitions the throne for aid in his struggle with the foreign trader, who, under the guise of friendship, insists on profiting himself by introducing an article highly injurious to the welfare of China.

The viceroy points out that there is no difficulty in putting an end to the baneful traffic, because the treaty of 1881 with America makes provisions to limit Chinese immigration to that country on account of the competition of Chinese labor being objectionable. And if they can prohibit our going there because Chinese labor is injurious to their interests, we have an equal right to prohibit the importation of kerosene when it is injurious to us. The law that nations have a right to protect their own interests and prevent injury being done to their people applies to both countries alike, if there be any justice; and when other government acts on this principle no objection can be raised by the other. The viceroy therefore formally requests that such terms may put to the importation of the baneful kerosene.

California Not Entirely Happy Yet.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 2.—The news of President Cleveland's approval of the Chinese exclusion bill aroused great interest here. Crowds surrounded the bulletin boards and discussed the situation. The Chinese manifested considerable excitement. The general opinion is that the effect of the law depends upon the construction given it by the courts, and if the courts treat it as they have the Chinese restriction act, letting Chinese land on writs of habeas corpus, the measure will be useless.

MONTHLY FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The Debt Reduced $12,000,000 and the Surplus $11,000,000.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 2.—The reduction in the public debt during September amounted to $12,247,028, and for the three months of the current fiscal year $35,530,030. The net cash in the treasury is $36,444,845, against $197,673,520 on Sept. 1. The gold fund balance in the treasury has decreased about $9,000,000 during the past month, and amounts to $197,713,115, and the silver fund balance, exclusive of $6,324,168 trade dollar bullion, is $34,511,068, or about $8,250,000 less than on Sept. 1. National bank depositories at present hold $57,317,385 of government money, or about $1,750,000 less than a month ago.

Government receipts during September aggregated $31,698,174—$2,000,000 less than during September of last year. Receipts from all sources for the first quarter of the current fiscal year were $97,526,253, against $102,328,397 for the first quarter of 1887. Expenditures for the quarter were $80,161,197, against $80,325,142 for the first quarter of 1887.

IS HIS MIND AFFECTED?

Mr. Randall Signs His Name to Letters as Speaker of the House.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 1.—Reports received in Washington do not give much hope of Samuel J. Randall's recovery. He may be in his place during the short session, but there is a common belief that though he is going to be re-elected he may never take his seat in the Fifty-first congress. There is a painful rumor at the capitol to the effect that his disease at times produced a mental disorder that is giving his family and friends great anxiety. It is said that one or more prominent members of his party in the house have recently received letters from him giving directions as to certain proceedings in which he signed himself as speaker of the house, evidently laboring under the hallucination that he was again the presiding officer of that body.

Ninety-Nine New Cases at Jacksonville—Fever Notes—A Bootblack's Gift.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 2.—New cases yesterday, 99, (white 25, colored 74); deaths, 10—William Baker, Mack Tucker, Thomas White, Primus Gordon (colored), A. W. Gordon (colored), Mrs. A. Oldfield, Dan Hally (colored), Paul Fridder, D. H. Murnahan, Anson Wood. Total cases to date, 2,725; total deaths, 204.

The expected falling off in new cases did not occur yesterday. The mercury fell nearly to the frost line Sunday night. The weather last night was cool, but a frost before the last of October would break the record for sixteen years. It is thought that contributions can soon be discontinued. The amount received to date is $236,867; disbursements, $74,478, leaving $162,389 on hand.

A Gainesville (Fla.) special says: "No new cases have been reported. The two sick members of Maj. Gruelli's family are doing well. There are no new cases at Fernandina. There is no yellow fever at St. Augustine. There are some cases of dengue fever there. There have been seven cases of yellow fever at Mango, but no deaths, and twenty cases and three deaths at Palmetto.

Biggest Chicago Contribution.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—Horace Davenport, the negro bootblack at the board of trade building, handed over to the mayor last evening for the yellow fever sufferers his entire receipts for last week. The amount was $15.

CONTROLLED BY SPIRITS.

Hallucination of a Chicago Machinist—Gouged His Eyes Out.

MATTOON, Ills., Oct. 1.—Peter Straubb, a Chicago machinist out of funds, came to Mattoon Friday. About 9 o'clock Saturday night he became possessed of the hallucination of being controlled by spirits and at their command danced until 3 o'clock Sunday morning, when he fled from his room without coat, hat, or shoes to get away from them. He jumped over the fence into an adjoining yard, but they continued to torture him. He rushed out on a broad street, but when he stopped to recover his wasting vigor he was again surrounded by millions of spirits. In appealing tones he said: "What can I do to induce you to cease your tortures?"

The spirits said: "Tear out your eyes."

"I have but one good eye and do not want to lose it."

They were inexorable, however, and insisted on the execution of their command. He then ran the forefinger of each hand into the sockets and gouged his eyes out. He was found about 7 o'clock Sunday morning insensible near a barn three-fourths of a mile from the boarding-house. He presented a ghastly appearance. He was taken in charge by the police, and physicians placed the balls in their proper position, but on account of the inflammation it was impossible to determine whether or not the sight of the good eye was injured.

While he is no longer disturbed by the spirits yet the mania is still upon him. He has a brother in Chicago, who is in the city electrician's department.

A Colossal Statue of Logan.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—The contract for what artists look upon as probably the most imposing and beautiful public ornament yet devised for an American city has been signed on behalf of the state of Illinois by the authorized representatives of the committee appointed under the terms of the Logan monument act. It is for a colossal statue of that heroic soldier. The sculptor is Augustus Saint Gaudens. The sum named is $50,000, which was appropriated by the state legislature. Saint Gaudens, left free to determine the precise form of the heroic figure, has resolved upon the noblest and most daring, as it will be the most decorative—the colossal equestrian statue.

Report of the Utah Commission.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 28.—Secretary Vilas Friday received a majority report of the Utah commission. They take issue with nearly every point held by the minority. The report renews recommendations made in the last report and opposes and admission of Utah as a state until the Mormons show a greater change of heart than is now exhibited. The commission charges the Mormons with duplicity with the government on the polygamy question. In conclusion the members join with the minority in recommending an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the practice of polygamy within the boundary of the United States.

A Wisconsin Town Wiped Out.

SPENCER, Wis., Sept. 29.—Thursday night the small town of Romeo, three miles north of here, suffered a repetition of the disastrous fire of 1886. The large sawmill, 100,000 feet of lumber, the stores, offices, blacksmith shop and dwelling houses were totally consumed. Only four buildings are left standing. The loss is estimated at $50,000. The fire was undoubtedly the work of incendiaries.

But Won't Iowa Be Dry?

HOUSEHOLD.

Demon Cake.

One cupful of butter, one of sugar, one of molasses, two eggs, four and one-fourth cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of ginger, one of cinnamon, half a grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of milk, one cupful of currants, and one of preserved ginger, cut in the strips. Beat the butter to a cream, then beat in the sugar, molasses and spice. Have the eggs well beaten and add them. Stir in the soda and flour. Have two pans well buttered. Pour the cake mixture to the depth of about two inches in each pan. Sprinkle a layer of fruit over it. Cover with a thin layer of the mixture and add more fruit. Continue this until the batter and fruit is used. Bake two hours in a moderate oven.

Silver Cake.

One cupful of sugar, half a cupful of butter, the whites of three eggs, half a cupful of corn starch, dissolved in nearly half a cupful of milk; one and a fourth cupfuls of flour, half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, and vanilla or almond flavor. Beat the butter to a cream and gradually beat in the sugar. Add the flavor. Mix the flour, cream of tartar and soda together and sift. Beat the whites to a stiff froth. Add the corn starch and milk to the beaten sugar and butter; then add the whites of the eggs and the flour. Mix quickly and thoroughly. Have the butter in sheets, and about two inches deep. Bake in a moderate oven for about half an hour. A chocolate frosting is nice with this cake.

Sweetbread Salad.

Boil six sweetbreads thoroughly in salted water. Chop them up when cold, and add to a mayonnaise sauce made thus: Take the yolks of four fresh eggs and beat, adding drop by drop enough of the best olive oil to make the quantity of sauce you want. Add a saltspoonful each of mustard and of salt, and lemon juice to taste. The sauce, as you continue to beat, will thicken rapidly—resting the bottom of the dish on ice will thicken it sooner. Beat with a silver fork. Just before serving, wash and dry your lettuce, dress it thoroughly with part of the sauce, and then pour in the centre of the lettuce the sweetbread mixed with sauce. This is delicious.

French Custards.

To make about seven custards, boil one pint of milk with four desert spoonfuls of sugar. Beat the yolks and whites of two eggs well together, and pour the milk, when slightly cool, on to the eggs, and beat well together. Fill seven china custard cups; stand them in a shallow tin of water, or frying-pan half full, and let them cook until they become solid, taking care to let no water get on the top. When set, take the tin off the fire and put the cups in the oven for the custard to slightly brown. Vanilla or any flavoring can be used; add this the last thing. The tin that comes expressly for making custards and other delicate cookery is called a bain marie at the house-furnishing stores.

Fig Cake.

Make a cake after the following receipt, and add to it one pound and a quarter of figs: cut the figs in thin slices or strips; dredge them with flour before putting them into the cake: one cup of butter, one and three-quarters of a cup of sugar, one of sweet milk, three pints of flour and two teaspoonfuls and a half of baking powder, the whites of ten eggs. As injuring the fig flavor, no spices or extract should be added. Bake in a moderate oven and be sure to line the tin with buttered paper. Frost the top only of the cake. A few drops of vanilla may be put into the frosting.

Sunshine Cake.

This is made almost like angelcake. Have the whites of eleven eggs and the yolks of six, one and a half cupfuls of granulated sugar, measured after one sifting; one teaspoonful of cream of tartar and one of orange extract. Beat the whites to a stiff froth, and gradually beat in the sugar. Beat the yolks in a similar manner, add to the whites and sugar and flavor. Finally stir in the flour. Mix quickly and well. Bake for 50 minutes in a slow oven, using a pan like that for angel cake.

Angel Cake.

The whites of 11 eggs, one and a half cupfuls of granulated sugar, one cupful of pastry flour, measured after being sifted four times; one teaspoonful of tartar, one of vanilla extract. Sift the flour and cream of tartar together. Beat the sugar into the eggs, and add the seasoning and flour, stirring quickly and lightly. Beat until ready to put the mixture in the oven. Use a pan that has little legs at the top corners, so that when the pan is turned upside down on the table, after the baking, a current of air will pass under and over it. Bake for 40 minutes in a moderate oven. Do not grease the pan.

Cutlets With Mushrooms.

Fry nicely some veal cutlets seasoned with pepper and salt and dressed with beaten egg and bread crumbs. Cook previously a sauce made of bits of veal, a carrot, a little onion, some parsley and sweet herbs and pepper and salt. Let these things boil for an hour with a pint of stock, strain, add a tablespoonful of butter and one of arrowroot taken. Simmer two dozen fresh or canned mushrooms in this sauce ten minutes, and a few drops of lemon juice; serve up a platter with the cutlets arranged in a circle around them.

Rice Cake.

One cupful of flour, one cupful of sugar, two and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one and one-half cupfuls of milk, half cupful of butter, one egg, one teaspoonful of salt. Beat the yolks and whites of the eggs separately and add them to the other ingredients, the whites last. Add rice to the batter last, and bake in a shallow pan to the depth of about two inches. Bake from one to one and a half hours in a moderate oven.

Gold Cake.

One cupful of sugar, half a cupful of butter, the yolks of three eggs and one whole egg, half a cupful of milk, one-fourth of a teaspoonful each of soda and cream of tartar, one and three-fourth cupfuls of flour. Mix the butter and sugar together and add the eggs, milk, flavor and flour, in the order named. Bake the same as the silver cake. A white frosting is good with this cake.

The Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Sult, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: "I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at.

The great popularity of Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic is due to its efficiency, agreeableness and pleasant action. It promptly and thoroughly cures colds, fevers, dyspepsia, costiveness, bad breath, piles, pimples, low spirits, sick and nervous headache, ague, malaria, scrofula, rheumatism, salt rheum and all stomach, liver and kidney troubles. Fifty cents of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. It cleanses and tones up the clogged and feverish system. Acceptable to the most delicate stomach. Harmless, prompt and thorough in its action.

MOHAMMED AND MUSIC.

The Prophet Nowhere Encourages the Practice of the Tonal Art.

It is, indeed, remarkable that the founder of the religion of a music-loving people like the Arabs should have been so decidedly indifferent to the practice of the tonal art. For although Mohammed, strictly speaking, was the avowed enemy of the plastic art only, yet nowhere do we find him encouraging the practice of the tonal art.

This is all the more unaccountable, since, notwithstanding the prophet's seeming indifference towards the art, he never denied his descent from a musical nation. For he tells us that when, like Moses, he withdrew into the solitude of the wilderness, there to hold communion with his God, he heard the sound, as it were, of a tinkling bell, and voices singing and calling to him, and on looking, behold, no one was nigh!

Afraid of losing his reason he communicated this strange manifestation to his wife, Chadidsha, and it was entirely owing to her ministering comfort that he took courage, and continued to believe in his Divine mission.

The fact of Mohammed seeking the advice of his wife would seem to indicate that the social position of Arabian women was superior to that of other oriental nations, and it breathes somewhat of that chivalrous spirit which we see now and then reflected in their melodies.

Music also had no important part assigned to it in the early wars of Mohammed. At the battle of Ohod, 625, A. D., in which the victorious Mohammed three times repulsed the Meccanites, the women, led by the poetess Hind, sang to the sound of the timbrel that the victor would be received with open arms.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A Barry county editor has bought a repeating shotgun, and after he's practiced awhile, will start out in pursuit of delinquent subscribers. If he catches 'em all, he's a clipper.

The courage of the Salvation Army seems to be unbounded. It has tackled Big Rapids sinners.

William Levers, a Pavilion farmer, doesn't hold dogs in very high esteem since they mutioned forty of his best sheep.

The crop of hay fever patients at Petoskey now numbers something more than 500. What a sneezing congregation they must be.

Sibley & Bearington, East Saginaw lumbermen, recently invested $100,000 of their surplus wealth in 400,000 feet of British Columbia timber.

The Bickfords Windmill company is sending its wheels to Chili, South America, Australia and several places deeper home.

Grand Rapids schools employ 234 teachers, and the teachers give employment to the birch and ferule.

Lother's fear of crop seems to be unusually abundant, but the Lutherans haven't yet begun the harvest in earnest.

The Hancock Chemical company has just built a storage house in which they propose to keep a supposed giant powder. The fellow who accidentally touches it the steel will have his ass attended in short order.

Sarah Campbell, a Jackson county lady, recently celebrated her 102d birthday, and related incidents that occurred when she was a little girl, only 90 years old. A fine example for a relentless industry.

Nobles county harvested six million cucumbers.

Walter Fisher, who lives at Flint, is a somnambulist of the pronounced type. He arose the other night and walked out of a second story window, and, although the ground under him sixty feet below, he didn't awake until he settled on a neighbor's sole leather.

Pretty soon, looking towards Santa Claus, baskets of peanut shells will be suspected at work in the Saginaw and Bay.

The Flint school ma'ams are going to keep the orchard of that town in mind if there is any compulsory school law, and if Young America is a truant he will be taken out to drive.

A farmer near Ionia raised more than 500 pounds of squashes from a single vine this season. Must be that the squash bugs of that vicinity took a vacation last summer.

Wm. Jackson's three the largest stocks of timber ever sawed in Michigan were cut the other day at Cranner's Carlisle mill. They were six in number, being twelve by ten inches and sixty-six feet in length, the butt log stock measuring 4 7-8 feet of timber. Crowell's mill had to be taken out entirely in order to do the work.

Alpena has four brass bands, and Alpenites are praying the Lord to hurry up and get out of the way so they can have a peaceful time in heaven.

A new scheme has been adopted at the Jackson prison, viz: that of allowing the prisoners who behave themselves properly, to wear suits of gray instead of the regulation stripe. About 80 per cent. of the inmates now wear the gray.

Andrew Boyd, a Ocean county lad, 15 years old, has killed his father and will be good boy 'til he gets the chance to work his father's farm and take it with apparent ease.

Business seems to have a good more grip during the month of August than any other month in Michigan.

Away back in 1884 John J. Tuttle, a Lee democrat, was nominated for congress, and now after a lapse of forty-eight years he is again been put up for the same position. In more ways than one Mr. Tuttle is an old timer.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Nichols, Orangeville people, after a married life of more than thirty years, have been blessed with a baby boy. The father is now 70, while the mother has passed her 52d birthday.

Corunna's street lamps are said to be seen with the wisp sort of affairs that when a fellow wants to hunt up one of 'em on a dark night he finds it necessary to carry a lighted lantern.

The management of the Genesee county fair offered a bang-up good cook stove to the good looking couple who would be married at their pumpkin shop, but the inducement wasn't sufficient to induce any sensible couple to make a public exhibition of themselves.

The Dejray Glass works, after a protracted rest, have again got down to business giving employment to 100 men.

Calumet and Heckla mining stock, of a par value of $25, is now selling at $385 per share. Looks as though the business was profitable, despite the great subterranean fire.

Occasionally a voter announces his intention of supporting Belva Lockwood in this campaign. But Belva insists that she's perfectly able to support herself without any male assistance, and what's more she's going to do it.

Albert Shook, a Guilford lad of 12 years, has the grit and get-there qualities of a full-grown man. The other day he went out for a hunt and ran against a big bear with two cubs. Bruin showed fight, and so did Albert, resulting in the death of the bear after a spirited contest.

Miss Leon Reigle, a Davidson lady, has sued Enos Sullivan $5,000 worth, not for breach of promise, but because Enos drove so like blazes on a recent excursion that she was thrown out of the buggy, injuring her constitution.

A Kalamazoo milkman made the startling discovery that his cows were drying up all of a sudden, with no apparent cause for so undesirable an occurrence. But an investigation cleared up the mystery. A gang of tramps, armed with old oyster cans, were trying to run the dairy.

Is woman possessed of patience? Well, yes, sometimes; but Mrs. Worden, of Nirvana, must have been a good many times, or she would never have got 21,402 pieces of cloth safely sewed into a bed quilt.

Grand Rapids' new city hall was formally dedicated on the 20th ult., a large crowd being in attendance. The new building is an imposing structure, and worthy of the pride and push of Michigan's "second city."

Seems as though it was getting late enough in the year for fish stories to take a rest for a season, but Dave, come! Frank Labadean, a Macomb county citizen, with a whopper of a pickerel, which he avers was 5½ feet in length and weighed 123 pounds. Oh! Frank, what a try was there.

A society of Saginaw ladies has proudly entered on the glorious work of reform. They hold semi-monthly meetings and rigorously eschew gossip and scandal. God bless 'em.

Another Michigan man has been heard from on the mother-in-law question. He lived at Shelby, and getting possession of the lady's property sold it and skipped. And the old lady—she has seen more than 80 years—has had to leave her home.

A state paper, in describing a newly dedicated Saginaw City church, says the lot upon which it was built was worth $500 and would seat 200 people, and by opening its folding doors certain little nooks and crannies could be thrown in that would double its seating capacity. Great are the mysteries and capabilities of Saginaw real estate.

Moses Widner, 86 years old, and a Wyandotte citizen for the past 80 years, is claimed to be the oldest Michigan voter. He cast his ballot for Andrew Jackson in 1828, and has been on hand at every national election since that time.

HE WAS TOO FRESH.

A Detroit Young Man Who Slandered Ladies Fittingly Punished.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 1.—William Lieffert is a fresh young man employed in H. Hornes' paper store on Gratiot avenue. Mrs. J. Edwards is the young and pretty wife of a traveling salesman and lives near the store. Lieffert finds time, it is said, to spread bad reports about the ladies in the neighborhood. A few days ago Mrs. Edwards learned that Lieffert had been talking about her and sent him a note requesting an apology. He paid no attention to the note, and Mrs. Edwards posted herself in a store adjoining that in which Lieffert worked and waited for him. He drove up a few minutes later, and she followed him into the store. "Talk about me, will you?" she said, as she brought a whip down on his back. He ran into the back part of the store and the woman followed him, raining down blows thick and fast. He had to bend a barrel, but she dislodged him. He finally ran to his wagon and drove away. The affair created a great sensation, and Lieffert was discharged when he came back, as being entirely too fresh. Mrs. Edwards said at night that he had assailed the reputation of all the ladies in the neighborhood, and the neighbors presented the whip with which the castigation was given. Both parties are well good society, and Lieffert is supposed to have fled to avoid the anger of Mr. Edwards.

WALDRON IN LONDON.

The Hillsdale, Mich., Absconder Located in the Old Country.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 1.—Charles M. Waldron, the Hillsdale banker who converted all his assets into cash and fled with Nellie Bidwell, a married woman of Quincy, has been located in London, England. On Sept. 5 he wrote a long letter to a Detroit friend explaining his whole course of action and the reason therefor. The letter was dated Berlin, Germany. In the letter he says he had family troubles (probably Mrs. Waldron's objections to his conduct) which made him feel like going away as far as he could get. The Bidwell woman was willing to go with him and did so. He had gone no farther than Montreal, however, when he became tired of her, and, giving her a small amount of money, told her to go back home. Waldron says he will return soon, prepared to pay every dollar he raised and have $50,000 left unencumbered. A cablegram received a few hours after this letter announced his presence in London, England, and his continued intention to return soon.

A Boy's Frightful Fall.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Oct. 1.—Roy Cummings, the 9-year-old son of Norman Cummings, climbed to the top of the Hydraulic company's stand pipe early Sunday evening, using a trail iron ladder that extends up the side to the height of 100 feet. He started to come down, and was taken with a fit a few feet from the top. A companion who made the ascension with him tried to hold him, and called for assistance. No help was near and the boy's strength gave out. Cummings fell to the ground and was instantly killed.

His Curiosity Resulted in Death.

ATHENS, Ga., Oct. 1.—Early last week Joseph Silver, a young farmer near Centreville, while cutting hay in a field encountered a large rattlesnake which he struck with his scythe and stunned. He supposed he had killed the reptile, and picked it up to cut off the rattles. He grasped the snake by the body, and as the knife penetrated it the venemous creature bit him on the little finger. Mr. Silver dropped the snake and cut the finger off at the middle joint above where it had been bitten. He then went home and drank a large quantity of whisky, and had his bleeding finger bandaged. He felt no ill-effects from the bite, and a few days later his curiosity led him to look for the piece of his finger which he had left in the field. He found the finger black with the poison it had absorbed, and without consideration of the consequence handled it. The virulent poison came in contact with his wound, and Sunday night he died in terrible agony.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 1.—An Enoch Arden case with a new finale has just developed in Bevier, Mo. Years ago H. C. Cooley lived in Illinois with his young wife. Times became hard and he started east to procure work, finally taking passage as a sailor on a ship bound for England. His wife heard nothing of him and eight years after his departure married Richard Dunkard. They located in Bevier. Cooley had returned and learned of his wife's marriage, finally tracing her to Bevier. After an interview the wife agreed to accompany husband No. 1, and they left Bevier for Newton county.

Watching Ireland's Advance.

DUBLIN, Oct. 1.—Cardinal Moran, archbishop of Sydney, preached here Saturday. He said in the course of his remarks that the Irish people in the colonies, especially those in Australia, were watching Ireland's advance towards prosperity, and were determined to help her all they could. The freedom of Dublin was conferred upon Cardinal Moran Monday.

A Sacred Concert for Charity.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 1.—A sacred concert was given at the Academy of Music Sunday night for the benefit of the yellow fever sufferers. Miss Jeannie Winston and members of the Amberg Opera company took part in the programme. Quite a handsome sum was the result of the concert.

Mrs. McGarigle to Join Her Husband.

WINNIPEG, Man., Oct. 1.—Mrs. W. J. McGarigle, wife of the Chicago traveller who is vegetating at Banff, arrived here en route to join her husband. She is accompanied by a couple of friends from Chicago, and a son about 9 years old, a handsome little fellow.

A Young Lady's Horrible Death.

SHEBOYGAN, Wis., Oct. 1.—A lamp overturned Saturday night and ignited the clothing of Miss Anna Gunderson, the 18-year-old daughter of the captain of the Nancy Hall. She was terribly burned and died Sunday of her injuries.

My! What a Name.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—His excellency, Hadji Hossein Ghooly Khan Motamed-El-Var, the newly appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from Persia to the United States, arrived in this city Sunday on the Servia.

THE LENAWEE COUNTY FAIR.

A Fine Exhibition and Large Attendance Notwithstanding Unfavorable Weather.

The county fair held at Adrian last week was probably the best exhibition ever given in Lenawee county. Although the weather was cold, and it rained nearly every day, that did not lessen the attendance to any great extent. There was a good crowd every day and a very large one on Thursday. We went down on Friday and spent most of the day on the grounds. This section of the county was represented in nearly all the departments, and in some of them the exhibits from Northern Lenawee were especially noticeable.

Among the exhibitors from these towns we would mention the following. As the entry cards had no name on them it is more than likely that some were overlooked in our travels, which equally deserve mention, and if such be the case we apologize in advance.

Newt. Pilbeam of Ridgeway, had some stock on the grounds and carried off second premium on 4 year olds.

Frank Kinney, of Cambridge, had a fine show of short-horns and took his share of the prizes.

Theo. Wood of Tecumseh, was on hand with his "Fairy" and did a thriving business all through the fair.

Ab. Simmons, of Franklin, had his celebrated stallion on exhibition.

Geo Holloway, of Raisin, had a fine show of Poland-china swine, on which he captured both blue and red tickets.

Frank Bryan, of Tecumseh, had a splendid show of grade merinos, on which he took one 1st and seven 2d premiums.

Wm. Witherell, of Franklin, had an equally good show of registered merinos, which carried off five blue tickets and one red one.

Wm. R. Wimple displayed several pens of Spanish merinos, which took their share of prizes.

Joe Keeney had a lot of his thorough bred sheep on the ground also, both Spanish merino and French merino.

In Floral hall, which was very nicely fitted up, we found some fine crochet needle work by Tensie McNeil, and some neat paintings by Pauline and Christine Wilson, Abner Wilson's little girls.

The new building for fruits and vegetables affords plenty of room for that department, which has been crowded hitherto. In this building C. D. Cutting, of Clinton, had a fine show of bee hives, honey and apiarian novelties. He carried off the honors in that line.

John R. Hixley exhibited six fine buggies, one of which was a late style two-seated Surrey. His exhibit bore two blue tickets.

In the educational department were a lot of fine specimens of examination work from the Tecumseh schools. They were fully equal to any on exhibition, although they showed simply the ordinary work during the first three weeks of the present term.

David Woolward, of Clinton, showed four of his latest style plows.

Bert Garlinghouse was one of the regular judges on horses, and was in attendance during all four days of the fair.

In the poultry department the exhibitors from this part of the county certainly "took the cake." There was a much finer show than last year in the quality of birds shown, the total number of birds being 275.

John Hanley had six pens of both land and water fowls, and carried off several blue tickets.

H. F. Barnes, of Ridgeway, who was the superintendent of the poultry department, had a fine display of partridge-cochins and brown leghorns. He took 1st on cochin chicks and 2d on fowls, and also 1st on leghorn chicks. Mr. Barnes buys his stock from the best breeders known, keeps none but the best strains and aims to breed nothing but first-class fowls. He had the best stock on the ground of the two breeds shown by him, of which he makes a specialty.

Dr. C. A. Waldron showed three pens, White Cochins and Plymouth Rocks, and took three blue tickets.

Mr. Pricket, of Indiana, an expert judge, was present during the fair and had charge of marking the points on all the fowls. This feature was one that the poultry men appreciated. He gave private score cards to those who desired them at 25 cents each.

Keyes & Kishpaugh, of Clinton, had the largest exhibit in numbers. They showed about fifty birds in all. They took the blue ticket on ten different varieties, some of them on both fowls and chicks, and three red tickets.

Vetook dinner at the M. E. church dining hall, where they gave a good square meal for only 25 cents.

OVER THE RIVER.

Kittie Helena Adams was born the 24th of March, 1868, and died Sept. 24, 1888, thus making her age at the time of her death just 20 years and 6 months. Her father, Mr. Rufus Adams, was a well-known, genial citizen of Tecumseh, who was taken from his family about a year ago. Her mother died when Kittie was only six years old, and for a number of years she and her only sister, Metta, were in the watchcare of their mother's sister now Mrs. Henry Crane.

A sunny, affectionate disposition made her a welcome friend, while her playful spirit brightened many hours for those she loved. She persevered in her studies and completed the high school course graduating in June, '87. Eager for her share in the active work of life, soon after her graduation she began clerking in the novelty store, where she did good service for a number of months.

Seven al years ago Mr. Adams married Miss Ella Jones, who proved a loving mother to Kittie in their re-established home. They were strongly attached to each other, and since their common grief in the father's death have been mutually sympathetic and helpful. When Mrs. Adams broke her wrist, less than a year ago, Kittie's devotion to her second mother was beautiful, and her constant, loving care did much to soothe and comfort the household in their varied trials.

Nearly five years ago she felt her need of forgiveness, and sought pardon, finding a calm trust in the Saviour's blood. Her hope was calm and even, rather than ecstatic, leading her to a careful Christian life. Since the winter of '84 she has been a consistent member of the Tecumseh Baptist church. Her father's death naturally interested her in his new home. Heaven has been much in her thoughts for the past year, and perhaps in this way her spirit was ripening for the same bright home—though we knew it not. Through the summer she was not as well as usual. Naturally reticent about her ailments, her friends guessed rather than knew that she was failing; for every morning in answer to their inquiries about her health she said she was better. Only eight days before her death her strong desire to worship in God's house led her to her own Sabbath evening young people's meeting. She failed rapidly during the following week, but there seemed no token of immediate danger, til Saturday afternoon and then she very soon became unconscious. Her sister, Metta, was hastily summoned from Ypsilanti, where she was attending the State Normal school. Warm friends watched around her bedside anxiously during her last hours, hoping she might rouse to give them some farewell word. But she peacefully slept her life away early Monday morning, the 24th of September.

Few who are orphans indeed have so many near friends anxious to comfort and shield them, but the lonely sister now doubly bereaved, the mother of these later years, the aunts and the grandmother had planned pleasant things to charm away the loneliness of the coming winter. Her death was widely felt; choice floral tributes expressing the esteem of many. Her funeral was attended at the home of her uncle, Mr. Crane, on Wednesday afternoon Sept. 26th, her pastor, Rev. F. Adkins, officiating. With a large circle of mourning relatives were her graduating class and her Sunday school class. Her many friends knew very well the warmth of her affection for them, though she spoke it not, during those last sad hours, and they were just as sure that her heart's best treasure was laid up above, and that she has gone to one of the many mansions the Lord has prepared for those who love and serve Him.

The story that P. D. Beckwith, the Dowagiac stove man, had come out for Harrison proves to be a campaign yarn. In this case however there was some ground for the story but the actual fact is thus explained by an exchange:

P. D. Beckwith, the Dowagiac stove manufacturer, did head some of his employees in a republican procession at Cassopolis, and he did listen to the old man Douglass' speech, but he is still a democrat. He listened to Douglass because he likes him and because he is still an abolitionist, and he headed his men in the procession because they asked him to, but he is going to vote for Cleveland. This is liberal politics.

IN HYMEN'S BONDS.

The spacious residence of William Hayden, Esq. was the scene of a brilliant social event last Thursday evening, the occasion being the marriage of Mr. Hayden's second daughter, Miss Lizzie, to Mr. Ezra J. Ware, of Grand Rapids. The various rooms of the mansion were profusely decorated with flowers and wreaths, and the assembled company was one worthy of the event. Promptly at the appointed hour the ushers, Robe Hosmer and Marvin Hayden, formed a passage way from the folding doors between the vestibule and the front parlor to the remote corner of the parlor, by extending chains from the door casings to the opposite side of the room. Chas. Waring and Louise Waring led the march, carrying the bride's flowers and placing them on the altar. They were followed by the ushers, and then came Will Hayden and Miss Belle Ware, Louis Hardenburg and Miss Belle Barlow, the bride and the groom, the latter taking their position beneath a beautiful floral bell. Miss Clara Hayden at the piano, Miss Mabelle with the violin and Levi with the flute executed the bridal march from Lohengrin. Rev. J. Phelps pronounced the marital ceremony of the Episcopal church in a very impressive manner. The usual congratulations followed and a superb menu was served. The groomsmen were C. H. Hollister, best man, W. H. Hayden, L. M. Hardenburg and L. C. Hayden. The bride-maids were Clara Belle Hayden, Clara Belle Ware, Mabelle Barlow and Mabelle Hayden.

The groom was attired in the conventional full dress evening suit. The bride was attired in a plain, close-fitting white silk gown, cut entrain and rather directoire style with girdle and ends embroidered. The bridesmaids all displayed elegant toilets. The maid of honor, Clara Belle Hayden, wore light pink faille and tulle and carried Jac's roses. Clara Belle Ware wore salmon pink faille, sleeveless, her neck encircled with three rows of pearls. She carried Marchiel Niel roses. Mabelle Barlow was dressed in rashes of roses silk rather empire style, with pink roses and diamonds. Mabelle Hayden was dressed in light blue faille, antique empire style, close fitting and plain with flowing sleeves. She carried white roses. A beautiful and costly array of wedding gifts cheered the hearts of the bridal pair.

About eighty guests participated in the festivities, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ware, of Grand Rapids; Peter Phelps, of Marquette; A. S. Hayden and wife, of Milan; H. A. Hayden, wife and daughter, of Jackson; Mrs. Z. K. DeMott, of Flint, and Miss O. Mason, of Toledo.

At 7:30 the bridal party left the house to bid good-bye to Mrs. A. D. Homer, who was detained from the wedding by illness, and thence they went to Adrian, where they took the late train to Toledo and other points south. Mr. Ware's home is at Grand Rapids, but he is traveling at present, and contemplates making his permanent residence at Ann Arbor. He is comparatively a stranger in Tecumseh but has made a most favorable impression upon all who have been favored with his acquaintance. Our young bachelors will envy him his good fortune in securing such a prize. The bride has grown from prattling childhood to budding womanhood among us, and has long been a favorite in our best society circles. Many eyes will fill with tears as the "word 'farewell'" is spoken. Many hearts will bid her God speed as she leaves the parental roof to embark on the uncertain voyage of life.

Franklin D. Teachout, the Democratic nominee for Sheriff of Lenawee County was born at Clifton Springs N. Y. in 1852. He came to Michigan when only seven years old and went through the district school in the town of Rome where he resided. He afterwards attended Adrian College and the state normal at Ypsilanti. When only 17 years old he began teaching school and taught for 13 winters. He then began farming in Rome which occupation he followed some time. He has served as U. S. Marshal. For four years last past he has been one of Sheriff Whitmore's most efficient deputies. From this brief sketch it will be seen that he has served excellent apprenticeship to fit him for the position of sheriff. Frank enjoys robust health; he is a man of indomitable industry and the strictest integrity; he is a genuine "hustler" in every sense of the word and if he does not "get there" it will surprise some of the best political judges in the county.

Adamson Bros. have been adding largely to their mammoth stock of books and stationery. It is a pleasure to look their stock over. They have many new novelties on their shelves and the prices on goods in that line are lower than ever before. They have had a long experience in the book trade and hence can satisfy the wants and tastes of their customers exactly.

GEN. S. B. DABOLL.

He Addresses a Large Audience at the Opera House, on the Political Issues, Viewed from a Republican Standpoint.

It was nearly 8 o'clock when Hon. Geo. Howell, chairman of the Republican meeting at the Opera House last Thursday night, arose and announced that the Dover glee club would open the meeting with a campaign song, and three young men faced the large audience and rendered the song with telling effect, as the audience called for another. Gen. Daboll, the speaker of the evening, was introduced and spoke for an hour and a half on the political issues of the day, holding his hearers in close attention throughout, and being repeatedly interrupted by applause. We give a synopsis below.

"When the Democratic party in '61 bade adieu to the halls of the executive mansion and financial affairs of this government, about the last act in the scene they went to the treasury of the United States, and going down through the empty vaults saw nothing between the top and bottom of them, in fact they found a hole in the bottom representing a debt of five millions of dollars, for which they had been attempting to borrow in the marts of the world money enough to pay the current running expenses of the government. They went away, and when on the 4th of March, 1885, they returned, they walked up to the same place and attempted to peer over, down into the same old vault, and were absolutely confounded when they run their heads against a pile of gold, piled up almost to the capacity of the vault. In fact a great surplus, they call it. It was an astounding thing to them, an unheard of thing in a Democratic administration. They let it very steadily and decidedly alone until about six or eight months ago, when it became necessary for them to make an issue for the present campaign, and it was then discovered by the head of the Democratic party that there was a surplus. The question to be decided is the system to get rid of that surplus, to prevent one in the future. Upon that issue the two parties will contest. As far as the protective feature is concerned the tariff for revenue only and free trade are synonomous terms. The policy of protection is exactly opposite of that. I have here some genuine imported Australian wool, which I would like anyone to examine. It comes in competition with and is a little higher priced than wool grown in Michigan, probably as high as the very best wool you produce in Michigan. They raise wool in Australia, where they pay a man $25 a year on the farm, where they do not cut one single blade of grass from year to year, where they never feed their sheep except to drive them on the broad fields. They pay a man to shear them seventeen cents a day. The ship approaches New York harbor, her entire cargo Australian wool. It has been raised at those prices and it can be put on the dock at New York for 14 to 16 cents a pound. Michigan wool could not be loaded there for 16 cents a pound. When it comes down to the lower harbor a man boards the ship and asks him up to the custom house, because there is a bill to pay on the wool. We have a president and congress to pay, we protect the people of the United States in their enjoyment of the labor of their hands, when a war comes we take the balance and pay the debts. We have millions of men to protect, and before you drive down the wages of these men we propose you pay on that wool ten cents a pound, to be applied on the government expenses. Until you do that you shall not come in with your wool. What is wrong about that? Had they ought to come in competition with us for nothing? We think we are about right, and the man who raises wool in Michigan or anywhere else, the man who works on the farm, in the factory, everywhere, is protected—not from the man bringing the crop over, but he is protected from the man who works for two dollars a month. The Republican theory of protection is a duty upon every article that we produce ourselves, leaving a tariff on all articles we do not produce.

'England is a free trade country but its history for 500 years shows she was the highest protective tariff country on earth, and she grew to be the most powerful country under a protective tariff that was absolutely exclusive. She entered upon free trade in the second year of Queen Victoria's reign. You can compete with England on anything in the world, providing you can get workmen to work as cheap. You remember a while ago we had occasion in the United States to buy 2,000 army blankets for the government service. Our secretary of war, thinking that everything that was 'English, you know,' was all right, offered to let English manufacturers bid on the contract, and they bid $2.25 each and America bid $2.55 each, a difference of 30 cents. As the government had to pay no tariff they bought where they could buy the cheapest. What is the result? Under free trade, the boss would come down to the factory some morning and say, 'Boys, I think we are not going to get those blankets to make and we will have to shut down.' Some of the men have homes near the mill, they don't want to leave them, they can't starve, and they are compelled to work for English wages or not at all. They say, let us buy where we can buy the cheapest. If that is true, you want to buy where you can buy the cheapest and sell where you can sell the dearest. You laboring men have got just one thing to sell, and that is an honest day's work. You have not got anything else until you get something ahead. The man who says that has nothing else to buy of you."

The speaker touched on the subject of temperance, defending local option and the good faith of the Republican party in introducing the measure into the state legislature. He closed with a eulogy on the conduct of Gen. Harrison in the late war, and censured President Cleveland for vetoing so many private pension bills, citing several cases where to his certain knowledge the persons applying were worthy and qualified to receive a pension, but were only debarred by the President's animosity.

A meeting of the Democrats of Tecumseh was held Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing a Democratic campaign club. Mr. Wm. Hayden was called to the chair and J. H. Smith was chosen secretary. A pledge was presented containing the names of 82 young men which formed the nucleus of the club. The following officers were elected:

President—William Hayden.
Vice Presidents, one for each school district—E. C. VanVleet, Chas Benedict, Richard Gillespie, J. F. N. Bowen, Horatio Keyser, Blinn Tallman, Joseph Russell, Chas Burridge.
Secretary—J. H. Smith.
Treasurer—David McNair.
Executive and finance committee—Alf James, Ben Garlinghouse, W. H. Hayden, John McCone, Thos Kyle.
Committee on speakers—D. McNair, C. A. Stacy, F. B. Wood.

The club adjourned to meet Tuesday, Oct. 9, at the T. C. B. room. A full attendance at that time is desired as business of importance will come before the club.

JOSHUA'S COMMISSION.

LESSON I, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 7.

Text of the Lesson, Josh i, 1-19—Commit Verses 8, 9—Golden Text, Eph. vi, 14. Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The book of Joshua tells us of the entrance of the nation of Israel into the promised land, the overthrow of the nations then in the land, its subsequent division among the tribes and the appointing of cities of refuge. The book closes with an account of the farewell address of Joshua and his death, at the age of 110 years; also the death of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, and the burial of the body of Joseph, which they had brought with them from Egypt and carried all through their wilderness wanderings.

1. "After the death of Moses." Dead as far as any further connection with Israel at that time was concerned, but personally he was gloriously alive. What a deliverance to be free from the burden of ruling and guiding that rebellious and unbelieving host; what a gain to be ever in the immediate presence of Him who had appeared to him at the bush, and on the mount and in the tabernacle, and to have personal fellowship with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Enoch and Noah and the myriads of the redeemed in glory.

2. "Arise, go over this Jordan." Joshua might have asked how they were to cross that river, but he had passed through the Red sea forty years before and he knew that the Lord was able to make a way, and when God gave a command he had only to obey.

3. "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread on." Thus He had said to Moses (Deut. xi, 24), and now He confirms it to Joshua. And yet when Joshua was old and stricken in years there remained very much land to be possessed (xiii, 1); and he had to say to the people, "How long are ye slack to go to possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?" (xviii, 3.) It was all theirs: they had only to go up and possess it, for the Lord would fight for them against their enemies and subdue them; but it was necessary for them to set their foot on the land.

4. "Unto the great river Euphrates." This was the eastern boundary of the land given to Abraham, but, with the exception of a short period in the days of Solomon, it was never possessed nor enjoyed. (Gen. xv, 18; II Chron. ix, 26.) It shall all be made good, however, after the first resurrection, when a greater than Solomon, the true Son of David, shall sit on David's throne and reign over the house of Jacob, and Abraham shall be proved to be heir of the world. (Luke i, 32, 33; Rom. iv, 13.)

5. "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee nor forsake thee." It was not a question of the power or skill of Joshua, but of Him who sent Joshua. When Moses asked, "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh?" the Lord's answer was, "Certainly, I will be with thee;" and when Moses said, "Oh, my Lord, I am not a man of words (margin), but I am slow of speech and of a slow tongue," the Lord said unto him: "Who hath made man's mouth? Have not I, the Lord? Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt say." (Ex. iii, 11, 12; iv, 10-12.) So in our Christian life it is never a question of what we are or what we can do, but of what He is and what He can do, for it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure. It seems to me that the greatest promise in the Bible for this present life is this one of the presence of the Lord with us and that He will never fail us nor forsake us. That which was the strength of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Joshua, Gideon, David and the prophets, and the last comfort of the risen Christ to His apostles, may and ought to be our daily joy and strength, and will be if we appropriate the promise in simple and sincere faith, thank Him for His presence and go forward relying on Him.

6. "Be strong and of a good courage." The presence of the Lord was reason enough why he should be strong and courageous; the necessity of his being so is seen from the fact that three times in this exhortation it is urged upon him (vs. 7-9). The strength was not to be his but the Lord's, who perfects His strength in our weakness and enables us to say, "when I am weak then am I strong."

"Thou shalt cause this people to inherit the land" (margin). Jesus is the true Joshua, who causes all His redeemed to inherit in due time the Kingdom. Moses seems to represent Jesus under the law and dying for the sins of the people, while Joshua represents Jesus in resurrection leading his people to rest and victory.

7. "Observe to do according to all the law." This is the only way of true wisdom and prosperity. There was no law given them to keep in the land of Egypt; not till after He by His own power redeemed and delivered them did He give them His laws and statutes to keep and do. God does not ask the sinner to keep His laws, but to receive salvation as a free gift in order that he may then keep his commandments and do them and thus have fellowship with Him. There is too much turning to the right hand or the left on the part of those who profess to be Christians, and too little of the "following fully" seen in Caleb and Joshua; a little stepping aside to the neglect of one command or transgressing in reference to another; a saying in reference to such precepts as "Be ye holy," or "Whether ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God;" that is what no one does nor can do, and it is no use to try, thus setting aside the command of God and making the inconsistencies of Christians a reason for increased disobedience. Nothing will do but a cheerful obedience to every command and a whole hearted surrender of spirit, soul and body to Him who is ready to possess us and live in us His own life over again.

8. Meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do." They were to set their hearts upon the words of the law, talk of them in the house and by the way, and teach them to their children, that thus their days might be as the days of heaven upon earth. (Deut. vi, 4-9; xi, 18-21.) If this was the command for the people, how much more for their leader? He as their guide was to "delight in the law of the Lord and meditate therein day and night." (Ps. i, 2.) David could say: "Oh, how love I Thy law; it is my meditation all the day." "The law of Thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver," and our Lord Jesus said: "I delight to do Thy will, O my God, yea, Thy law is within my heart." (Ps. cxix, 72, 97; xl, 8.) If Jesus lives in us, possessing us fully, He in us will still delight to do the will of God, and rejoice more in the word of God than in all riches, for He is Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today and forever.

9. "Have not I commanded thee?" For a soldier it is enough that he has been commanded; it is not his to ask or reason why, but only to obey. How much more should it be enough for the soldier of the Lord Jesus? Such an one should know no fear nor dismay, but ever be strong and of good courage, believing that the Lord his God is with him whithersoever he goeth.

WAVE-POWER MOTOR.

Utilizing the Immense Water Power of the Ocean Itself.

After many accidents and trials the wave-power motor so long talked of, has at last been finished and proved a success. The construction of this machine or apparatus, which was begun in July, 1886, was at the time considered a hair-brained scheme, but the projectors stuck to their plan and seem now to be in a fair way of success. Great difficulty was experienced at first in getting the materials to withstand the force of rocks thrown against them by the waves and the pipes which conduct the water up the bluff were broken and carried away no less than fourteen times. When the schooner Parallel went ashore and her cargo of dynamite exploded the motor was completely wrecked. A mass of rock weighing six hundred tons was thrown from the cliff and fell across the chasm over which the motor was suspended blocking it up to such an extent that nearly three months were consumed in blasting out the debris. Soon afterward another mass of stone weighing one hundred and fifty tons fell and had to be removed. The motor, which was designed and built by E. T. Steen, is a very simple contrivance and still is capable of exerting a great power.

Across a chasm in the rocks just north of Parallel Point a bridge of heavy timbers was built. Suspended from this is a huge fan or paddle of oak timbers, with the spreading portion downward. This is fastened to the bridge by immense hinges which allow it, when in operation, to swing back and forward a distance of thirty six feet as the waves strike it. The handle or upper portion of the fan is connected with a solid plunger pump twelve inches in diameter and having a stroke of nine to twelve feet. This pump in turn is connected with a suction pipe running out into deep water. The fan is so rigged that it can be drawn up out of reach of the waves when not in use. When a wave comes in the fan is thrown forward and forces the air out of the pump barrel in which the plunger works. On the wave receding the fan is carried seaward and the plunger drawn out, causing a vacuum and causes a quick rush of water into the suction pipe. The force with wich the water is drawn up is sufficient to raise it to an elevation of 350 feet above the tide level.

Should this motor prove as successful as the projectors seem confident it will, several others will be built in the same neighborhood and an immense reservoir built on the hill to contain the water.

This one motor, with its twelve inch plunger, is capable of raising 12,000 cubic feet of water 300 feet high in every twenty-four hours. The uses to which the water will be put are various. A thirty-six-inch pipe will be conducted to the city and water will be supplied to all branches of industry where machinery is needed. Bathing houses will also be supplied with salt water and sewers flushed where it is necessary.

The first work performed will be begun in about ten days, and an eight-inch pipe is now being laid for the purpose.

The last-mentioned pipe is for Adolph Sutro and is to be utilized in sluicing way a large amount of drifting sand from the heights just back of the aquarium. The work is rendered necessary to prevent the sand from washing back on the beach and retarding the work there.

The immense fan of the motor generates a large amount of energy which is not used in working the pump, and when everything is in shape electric dynamos will be erected to utilize this energy for heating purposes and the like.

Justice in China.

The Tartar general for Kirin gives an account of the trial of an officer named Telengo, one of whose men committed suicide under the fear of receiving further punishment. The deceased, Yu-ch'eng by name, was a government hunter and at the same time a soldier in the company commanded by Telengo. Not long ago he bought some clothes on credit from a fellow soldier named Sau-hai, promising to give him the money, 400) cash, when they received their pay.

On the 5th of April, while Telengo was engaged in paying his men, Sau-hai asked Yu-ch'eng to settle the debt. Yu-ch'eng refused and a quarrel commenced between the two men. Telengo heard the noise and sent for them, but when they came they refused to answer his questions and behaved in an insubordinate manner. He therefore commanded a pretty officer named Futunga to flog them.

While Sau-hai was undergoing punishment, Yu-ch'eng took the opportunity to run off, but he was recaptured by some soldiers sent after him, and was given 100 blows, with a whip, on the legs. Next morning he ran away again, but was brought back. He was punished with seventy blows, after which ten more were inflicted by Telengo himself, because he considered that sufficient severity was not being used. Telengo also said that he would report the case to the general and have the man properly punished. After this he went off with his troops to the drill ground, where he found an opportunity to speak to the general. The latter directed that the man should be sent to the quartermaster general's department and dealt with there. A file of soldiers were sent to take him across, but they found him lying down unable to move. When questioned he said that he was afraid of being further punished after the floggings he had received and had swallowed some opium which had been left from an entertainment given the day before. Remedies were applied, but without avail, and in a short time he was dead.

The Memorialists finds that Telengo was right in ordering the deceased to be chastised, and that the flogging was inflicted on a proper portion of the body. But the amount of punishment, 180 blows, was excessive. He therefore condemns Telengo to receive ninety blows, under the statute which deals with the offense of causing a man's death by punishing him improperly. In addition, Telengo must pay Tls. 40 toward the deceased's funeral expenses.

As Telengo is a commissioned officer it will be the duty of the Board of Punishments to determine what form the penalty shall actually take. Futunga, who administered the beating, is condemned to receive eighty blows. The soldiers who were guarding the deceased are condemned to receive sixty blows, under the law punishing gaolers who allow a prisoner to commit suicide. As Sau-hai, by quarreling with the deceased, was the original cause of what has occurred, he is condemned to receive eighty blows. Yu-ch'eng, being dead, no further notice need be taken of his offense, and his debt to Sau-hai is extinguished.

TATE SPRINGS, TENN., July 4, 1888.
The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:

Gentlemen—Seven years ago I contracted an exceedingly bad case of blood poison. I tried a physician, the best at command, but secured no benefit. My throat began to get sore, and my body covered with sores and ulcers. Going from bad to worse, I felt that my grave must be reached in the near future. I gave up the doctors' treatment, and with a despairing hope I commenced taking your medicine. I began to improve from the first bottle, and in a short time the ulcers healed, and my skin cleared off and was entirely well.

One year ago a case of catarrh developed in my system. The physician did his best, but could not cure me; but two bottles of Swift's Specific gave me permanent relief.

THE GOOD-BYE TO WARTS.

Some Strange Remedies for These Annoying Excrescences.

Warts may be banished, say some, by merely wishing them gone.

The Breton peasant passes his hands over them, makes the sign of the cross, and bids them go in God's name. In Deux Sevres you must pinch them each time you think of them, and say, "one!" In Lusatia, when you see a funeral pass, say, "Thou! thou! in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost!" or when two carriages pass, say, "Get out! get out!" The troublesome warts will follow the procession.

A formula used in the same place runs thus:

Wart, wart, wart,
Wart, don't grow to an abscess;
Wart, don't fester
Until the mother of God
Gives to the world another son,
In the name, etc.

And the same is used in Germany.

A funeral procession is also utilized in Ireland by saying: "May these warts and this corpse pass away, and never more return. In the name," etc. The warts must be rubbed with the hands during this time.

Many remedies depend upon this idea of transmission to some person or inanimate object.

In Lancashire, the warts may be rubbed with a cinder, which must then be wrapped in paper and dropped at cross-roads. Whosoever picks it up will get the warts.

In Lusatia, certain marine petrifications picked up on the beach are used in the same way, with the addition of the formula, "In the name of the Father," etc.

In Lower Brittany, small buttons are made of slate, and the credulous peasants count out as many as the number of their warts, inclose them in paper, to look like a roll of pennies, and throw this away on the first road, believing that the person who shall pick up the deceptive package will take the warts with him.

In Deux Sevres, as many pebbles as there are warts are placed in a cavity in the wall, in the hopes that some one will get them and the warts!

The Lusatian peasant will tell you to go into the forest, where the branches are moved by the breeze, to take a clod of dirt heated by the sun, pass it thrice over the warts in the name of the Father, etc., and come away.

Another class of remedies depends on the transference of the troublesome visitors to some object that will speedily decay.

I have heard, when a boy, that a piece of beef would cause them to disappear, if they are rubbed with it and the beef buried. There are many variations in this remedy in various parts of the world. It is, perhaps, the most popular cure of all those given.

In Northumberland, Devonshire and Lancashire, the beef should be stolen, and in Deux Sevres, two pieces must be used, and then tied together. In Lancashire it is not buried, but must be carefully nailed up on a gate post at a point where four lanes end, or any other secure place, and suffered to decay. In Devonshire the beef must be thrown over a wall and your left shoulder at the same time.

Pork or lard is substituted for beef in many places. In Scotland, stolen bacon is necessary, and lard from a male pig in the Vosges mountains, buried deep in the ground. In Lower Brittany you must steal a piece of lard from your neighbor's chimney, taking care not to be caught at it, rub the warts with it and put it in a manure pile. Norman peasants use a pork rind, and put it in a rut in the road; when a carriage passes over it a cure is insured.

Learned Professors Say.

The most serious diseases of the heart, says Prof. Da Costa, may occur without any symptoms. Prof. Trousseau, of Paris, states that death from heart disease is usually caused by congestion of the lungs, liver, stomach or kidneys, from imperfect circulation of the blood. Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart is the latest and most reliable remedy for this little understood but grave disease. It has cured thousands of cases. Don't fail to try it. Ask for testimonals. Sold at Baker and Hall's Drug Store.

CERTAINLY THE BEST.

Papillon (Clark's extract of flax) Catarrh Cure, from an experiment, has grown to be the acknowledged superior of any remedy for similar purposes. Purely vegetable and scientifically prepared, it is absolutely harmless, and effects cures where all other known remedies and the most learned medical talent fail. That it is a favorite with all classes is evidenced by the fact that during the past two years, 86,000 gallons have been sold. Positively cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Colds, etc., etc. Large bottles only $1,00.

Itch, mange, and scratches of every kind on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Woolford's Sanitary Lotion. This never fails. Sold by Baker & Hall, Druggists, Tecumseh Mich.

WHAT IS IT? AND WHAT IT IS.

Papillon (Clarke's extract of flax) Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants, from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symptoms, all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts to 1,032,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1.00.

Good Woman for Colorado.

One of the remarkable women of the age is Miss Cornwell, whose success in deciding upon and estimating the properties of mines has won for her the title of "The Princess Midas." She is English, but in babyhood was taken to Australia.

Five years ago she began to visit mines and to ask questions. She listened to the explanations of theorists, and got practical miners to teach her what they knew.

To the theories and facts thus obtained she added her own intuitions and judgments, and thus developed such a remarkable faculty for determining the values of mines that many persons think she has the gift of second sight.

THE WESTERN METROPOLIS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 1st, 1888.

DEAR HERALD.—Now is the time when this great city bustleth and putteth on her many frills. The exposition is in full blast and visitors throng the city. Thousands coming and going daily, but as yet I have seen none of my Tecumseh acquaintances. The art exhibition at the exposition is a thoroughly good one, and although I have seen better works in former exhibits, none have been more uniform. There have been many changes in the main hall of the great building. The perpetuous machinery that once filled the north end is missing, and the space filled with other shows, principally buggies, etc. One looks in vain for the familiar faces of Hudson Conklin or Mr. Heesen in close proximity to one of Brewer's brick machines.

The great fountain still throws its many streams into the central dome of the building, while its spray changes its hues by the aid of limited calcium lights. The great aquarium tanks still contain their fine specimens of the finny tribes. The same restless multitudes are passing too and fro, while the different exhibitors are vying with each other in advertising their wares.

The theatres are in full blast, giving us nightly comedy and opera. Booth and Barrett are playing a three weeks engagement at the Grand Opera House. Owing to their extravagant prices they have not the large houses of last season's visit. Tonight the Columbia Theatre opens with the Lillian Lewis Company in "The Queen's Money." Mrs. Langtry has [illegible] Mr. Morton [illegible] and is Mr. Morton [illegible] and [illegible] the theatre.

Politics begin to warm up and we soon expect the usual parades and the great noise incident to them. I have [illegible] to one. I have listened to several claims. Republicans claim it will be close yet and one same one declares to me that the Pure whisky and tobacco clause in the Republican platform, if this year does not mean what it says, I shall not vote for Harrison. I cannot vote a ticket that says the liquor traffic is a burden to agriculture, or that the tax on the poor widows of the rum holes shall be taken. I cannot endorse Cleveland, for his violation of the pledges made in his first letter of acceptance prove to me that he cannot be depended upon to keep his promises. So I think Fisk will corral my vote, as he will the votes of temperance republican voters.

I frequently receive letters from young men and boys who write me to inform me that the old village life has grown distasteful to them, and that they would like to have me secure them places in the city, where they would have a chance to grow, expand, and become rich, famous or all three. To all such aspirants for city honors I wish to say a few words. Many of the prominent wealthy business men of this city, were at one time country boys, but were one of the youths from the above become distinguished. [illegible] above the average [illegible] for a boy to get a [illegible] he has some extra [illegible] clerkships in any of the [illegible] or [illegible] can find a [illegible] for their wares, but the outside [illegible] good place a poor show. If a [illegible] is and to try [illegible] like this, he had better [illegible] coming here, provide himself with money enough to pay from [illegible] eight weeks board, at from [illegible] seven dollars per week, a return ticket and considerable extra cash for extra expenses, washing, street car fare, etc. He should also provide himself with extra heavy soled shoes, as walking wears here, and he may need them for measuring the pavements when he returns home.

Baron Yerkes, notwithstanding that his north side clothes-line-cable cars are a practical failure is preparing to put in a cable line on the west side, and the material for the construction of the road is being distributed along Madison street. Westsiders would prefer elevated roads, but what does his lordship care? Rapid transit is still a problem in Chicago. L. F. W.

THE true American has a warm place in his heart for the old Log CABIN. It's not "English you know," but from the Log Cabins of America have sprung men in every respect greater than any from the great castles of Europe. Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla is the best in the world.

"Nearly Everybody Reads It."

The Merchant reads the Chicago Daily News because he must know what's going on in the great business centres of the world, and he can't waste time hunting for it in a "blanket sheet."

The Farmer reads the Chicago Daily News because he makes more than $3.00 a year—one cent a day—by keeping promptly posted on the variations of the market,—he doesn't wait for the slow weeklies any more.

The Mechanic reads the Chicago Daily News because he knows that even in matters of handicraft the more general intelligence a man has the more he'll earn. The workingman can well afford the daily paper at "one cent a day."

Grandfather reads the Chicago Daily News because it gives all the news, and yet so condensed that it doesn't tire him out to read it. And then, the print is so clear.

Mother reads the Chicago Daily News because she wants to keep up with her husband in general information, and then she particularly enjoys the household hints and things of special interest to women which are in it every day.

Grandmother reads the Chicago Daily News because she still wants to know what's going on. And it's a comfort to see a daily paper in the family that's clean and pure,—one she's not afraid to have "the children see."

The Boys all want the Chicago Daily News because it gives them all the ball news so fully, to say nothing of all the other things boys enjoy. And this year even the boys don't skip the political news.

The Politician always reads the Chicago Daily News because its an important paper, and whether he likes its independent views or not, he wants to know the news. He supports "his party or party "organ," but when he wants real news he reads the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

The Girls all read the Chicago Daily News because they're specially interested in its chatty gossips about fashions and home matters, to say nothing about the excellent serial story always running.

The Post Office Review, says: "Nearly everybody who reads the English language in, around and about Chicago, reads the Chicago Daily News." Do you? Its a "[illegible]" to the point paper," made particularly for busy people, as it costs one cent a day. All newsdealers sell it, and all postmasters forward subscriptions for it at $3.00 a year, or $1.00 for four months. Address,

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Last Friday was quite a day for Clinton, it being the day for a general pole raising by the democrats, and a game of base ball between the local club and the Jackson League team. While the elements were against both as it rained nearly the whole day, yet the poles went up just the same, and five innings of the ball game was played. The Tecumseh band was present and discoursed very fine music for which they are justly celebrated, during the raising of thirty-one poles. In the morning all hands went to Geo. R. Brown's, where the first pole was raised, and returning they stopped and raised one at Lon Mill's. It then began to rain so hard it was decided to defer further action until after dinner. Promptly on time they again started out and poles were raised by different individuals in the following order: C. D. Keyes, Peter Jacobs, Dow Draper, John Hause, Frank Lancaster, Ed. VanDeMark, Albert Kishpaugh, James Gillen, Robt. Ellis, Geo. Hard, Geo. Calhoun, J. S. Kies, Frank Woodward, Wm. C. Rogers, Thomas Higgins, Sylvanus Howell, Frank McClure, Ben Woodward, Jas. Carter, Chris. Schmidt, Mrs. Isaac Halpin, Mrs. E. P. Felton, Wm. D. VanTuyle, E. R. Smith, John McAdams, Don E. Palmer, C. S. Burroughs, W. Hubbell Smith, after which the large pole on the corner of Jackson and Chicago streets was raised in fine style. Scove Stacy then made a short address. In the meantime there was a large attendance, considering the weather, to witness the ball game. It started out in fine shape with Jackson at the bat. Bob struck out the first three that faced him, and Clinton scored one in their half of the inning on Palmer's single on error and passed balls. The rain began to fall again and our boys not being accustomed to play in the rain as are the league clubs, seemed to lose their grip and so fell easy victims to the Jackson team by a score of 7 to 1, in 5 innings, when the game was called on account of the rain by the consent of both clubs.

Saturday afternoon the Jackson team and the home club played on the Tecumseh grounds. While the sky was clear the grounds were very wet, owing to the heavy rain the day and night before. Taking this into consideration it was a fine exhibition of the national game in which Clinton had the best of it in every respect, but by some rank decisions of the Umpire the game when called at the end of the fifth inning was a tie.

J. L. O'Mealey made a grand speech at the Town Hall Wednesday evening on the tariff question. The audience was large, attentive and appreciative, and the speech clear and logical.

Friday evening the town hall was well filled considering the dark night and heavy rain, to hear the issue between the two parties discussed. Owing to the weather the committee decided to hold J. L. O'Mealy till Wednesday evg of this week, so S. C. Stacy occupied the platform for over an hour discussing the tariff in a manner that not only held the attention of the audience but demonstrated that he was fully posted on the subject. It was a clear, concise and convincing exposition of the fallacy that a high protective system is a benefit to the farmer and laboring classes. We should like to hear him again.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Thanks to a gracious Providence for a very fine and much needed rain.

Mrs. J. Britton is slowly recovering from her recent illness.

The Fisk and Brooks party have done really well in getting up their pole; it is the admiration of all beholders. Straight as an arrow and stands 100 feet above the surface, with a small flag of stars and strips waving at the head, and a little below that a long and handsome streamer floats in the breeze, with the names of Fisk and Brooks.

Thos. V. Hoagland is having a new paint dress put on his house.

Mrs. Scott has her new house about inclosed; it is a fine cottage building.

H. C. Rauch, our late druggist, who was burned out a short time since, has gone with his family to Kansas, on a visit to friends there, and perhaps to remain if business prospects suit him.

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held on Thursday afternoon Oct 18th. at the home of Mrs. E. W. Borden. A full attendance is desired.

Miss Flora E. Borden is visiting her sister and other friends in Clio, Genesee Co., Mich., and will be absent some weeks.

The building of the new brick block is fairly under way: it makes business lively.

The raise on wheat is cheering to farmers, but many hold on to their grain yet $1.10 a bushel is not enough. Oats, too, appear to be on the rise. Corn is not yet being husked and the chickens at Britton are bitterly complaining of having to pay $1.0 a hundred for screenings. But when the tariff question, and the rum question, and all other political issues are settled, perhaps prices will settle too. Any way, we all hope to live and pay our way until we see what all the political speeches and pole raisings are to amount to. We shall certainly have a President, or a Vice-president, or both, and a Congress. And Britton is to live and thrive and grow great; who can say she will never rival the beautiful Tecumseh? We'll see.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

H. D. Johnson and wife returned to Sanford after a two weeks visit among friends here.

Mrs. James Harmon is visiting in Pennsylvania.

There was a Prohibition pole raising at C. V. Skinner's Monday.

It seems that burglars and pickpockets follow the Republican "Jumbo" show, the same as they do any other aggregation.

A. Easlick and wife were visiting at Caro, Tuscola County, last week taking in the county fair which was noted for its two grand balloon ascensions, Thursday and Friday; in the latter Prof. Bartholemew made the descent in a parachute.

Wm. Lamb of Caro is convalescing from injuries received in falling with a scaffold 16 feet, while carpenting on a building the concussion paralized his lower limbs.

The Prohibition club meeting at Grange Hall, Monday night brought out an overflowing house, standing room being at a premium. The program by the Wolverine Glee club, including "chalk talk" was good. The next meeting will be at Pennington's corners, L. C. Chase of Raisin will do the talking, and the Wolverine glee club make the music, a strong combination. Mr. Chase is the best local speaker we know of, and those of that vicinity who never heard him should attend this meeting on Monday evening, Oct. 22d.

When you need a good safe laxative ask your druggist for Ayer's Pills and you will find that they give perfect satisfaction. For indigestion, torpid liver and sick headache there is nothing superior. Leading physicians recommend them.

AWAY DOWN EAST.

ANNAPOLIS, NOVA SCOTIA
September 15th, 1888.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD.—The Herald whose acquaintance we have enjoyed for over ten years is still very welcome to us whenever it reaches us. Anything coming from the pretty town on the Raisin is still and ever will be intensely interesting to us. Our thoughts lovingly lead us to the little city of the dead, so replete with sequestered beauty and quiet where our darlings peacefully sleep, amid the white stones and vernal mounds of blessed memory. Distance can never detach us from Tecumseh for that golden chord that holds us to those we love but never lose would belt the habitable globe, yea reach into the eternal beyond, where they are.

Now Mr. Editor, in spite of the President's most definite epistle, I am still very anxious about the land of my adoption for it has not disturbed my urbanity towards the greatest Republic the world ever has or ever will see.

I am here for three months under the auspices of the Maritime Province Bureau. It takes me through Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Cape Breton, Prince Edwards Island into Newfoundland probably, but not to the North Pole, but a long distance toward it though. After this tour, Manager number two has the remainder of the season taken in a lecture course thro' New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana.

Mrs. Clarke and John, Jr. are along, sojourning by the Atlantic Ocean, while Nellie and Abbie Clarke are at the ladies College, Hamilton, the very best college of the kind in this Dominion.

I have read with extreme pleasure the very interesting letters to your worthy parents. In reading some the clear vision was temporarily obscured by the blinding mist of tears. Let me add tho though a resident of Tecumseh but a few years, yet I learned to esteem very highly your honorable parents and members of your family, and most ardently hope that the honored couple, so happy in these autumn days, may still live—not merely linger but live tranquilly on the slope of the golden sunset until the gates of transition open gloriously that they may enter into the eternal development.

JOHN R. CLARKE.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

M. M. Florence and wife left last Thursday for a visit with his brother and friends in "York State."

Quite a number of our residents went to Tecumseh last Saturday to see the big republican pole raised and hear the speeches.

Workmen are at work re-building the old stock yards at this place. The old yard was a temporary affair and will be replaced by a substantial and permanent structure.

It is rumored that Philo Lossing is soon to put in new scales at the scale house.

MACON MUSIC

Mrs. Isaac Pennington and her daughter Anna are spending a few weeks in Dakota visiting Mrs. Booth.

Emma Cotton gave a party Sept. 27th in honor of her 15th birthday. A very enjoyable time reported; ice cream and cake was served. A number of our citizens went to Adrian on Thursday last to hear Blaine speak.

Dr. Howell and wife of Tecumseh, attended morning services at the Reform church last Sunday.

Capt. E. P. Allen will deliver a political speech here on Friday evening, Oct. 12th.

A LOG CABIN does not look very handsome from the outside, with the coon skin nailed on the door, but health and contentment the hardy pioneers of American civilization found in them. Their health was maintained by simple remedies of roots and herbs, now reproduced in Warner's Log Cabin Remedies, made by Warner of Safe Cure fame.

Professor Gaunther, of Paris, states that certain vital processes of the body develop putrefying substances in the tissues, which, if not speedily eliminated, produce disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla effects the removal of these substances, and thereby preserves health.

It is beneficial in a hundred ways to be healthy. Restore your health by using Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood, regulates the liver.

Try it—12 doses for 1.00. Sold by your druggist. There is no Sarsaparilla "just as good." Get it.

Are You Taking It?

"Are you taking the F. E. C. Kidney Remedy?" is becoming a common inquiry. The F. E. C. is known to be an honest remedy and is doing a world of good. J. J. Orr sells it.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

Speech of Hon. L. M. McKinley, House of Representatives, Aug. 7, 1888.

The number of private pension bills approved by President Cleveland, or allowed to become laws by him by limitation, to July 24, 1888, were 1,264.

The number of private pension bills approved or allowed to become laws by limitation during the entire period of Republican administration were 1,524 or only 260 more in 20 years after the war than President Cleveland has approved in three years and five months. There is little doubt that before the present congress adjourns President Cleveland will have approved more private pension bills than all the Republican presidents from Lincoln to Arthur.

Private pension bills approved by President Grant 154
President Hayes ..... [illegible]
President Arthur 708
President Cleveland 1,264

Average per year under Grant 101
Hayes 53
Arthur 236
Cleveland 360

During President Cleveland's administration he has vetoed 41 private pension bills 109 bills failed for want of examination. And for aught appears the remainder of the bills number a strange way to show his country's gratitude. Had he only lived up to his professions to pensioning soldiers how much better he could have done it by vetoing the 109 and allowing the 41 to pass.

POLITICAL SPEECH.

Blaine to the G. O. P. (imagine voice):

As I know my sole
Sir.
Do I Jonah swallow the whale
Or vice versa

Tried to swell up as big as the Whale in the tales

See?
Gents.
Be careful of your diaphragm
There is only one of me.
And a good many of you
And so also are there many skippers
In the cheese

In 1883 Carroll D. Wright, chief of the Massachusetts labor bureau, conducted a searching investigation of the question of wages in Massachusetts, the results of which he gave to the world in a series of elaborate tables contained in his annual report for 1884. Mr. Wright is an accepted authority the world over in this best of investigation.

From his tables nine leading industries with which tariff legislation has most busied itself since 1883 are selected, and the wages paid in each under the low and high tariffs of 1860 and 1880 respectively are compared as follows:

Industry.	Wages 1860.	Wages 1880.
Carpets	$ 6 62	$5 87
Clothing	8 26	8 31
Cottons	6 50	7 37

Leather	10 01	9 63
Linens and jute	4 63	4 82

THE TARIFF AND THE FARMERS.

How High Taxes on Raw Materials Cripple the Small Industries.

Editor Times:—I have seen so many letters in the Philadelphia Times touching all topics in this campaign but the one of labor in the agricultural districts. To the reader, when I say agricultural regions, I do not mean within a radius of twenty miles of a city like Philadelphia. But those districts like Cumberland Valley, Lebanon Valley and all other valleys, counties and states this side of the Mississippi river, where agricultural pursuits are carried on as a livelihood.

Farmers can not make over three per cent on their investment by farming. And why? Because the great supply of wheat, corn, oats, horses, cattle, sheep and hogs come from beyond the Mississippi river, where agricultural lands are selling from $5 to $15 per acre. This great competition yields more than lands in fertile valleys in this and other states at $100 to $150 per acre, with less cost in farming, with less cost in fertilizing, etc.

In these agricultural districts this side of the Mississippi the small towns, etc., are principally made up of men who do manual labor for the farmer. The introduction of machinery has reduced manual labor to a minimum. For instance the reaper and self binder, the steam thresher, phosphates, barb wire fencing, etc., all of these are labor saving and go into any of these districts. Have a good plain talk with any of these laborers and ask them what is their annual income from the labor and I say positively that it is not over $300 per year at the most.

Then take the small manufacturing establishments of these small agricultural towns, the carpenter, the cabinet maker, the tinker, the wagon and plow maker, the harness maker, the boot and shoe maker, the blacksmith and all other occupations and ask them the number of hands they employ compared with twenty years ago, and I will find that in one of the above-named shops hands have run north of the men employed, thus making more for home.

Now I have given you a rapid sketch of the farmer in an agricultural district.

How is he to be benefited by keeping the tariff on raw materials on the free list, which will put the price of his labor down as low as it was before the war? And the days of labor, how is he to be benefited by keeping up the eight hours as much as before and during the war? His labor has been reduced by machinery. You do not want to go to work and destroy all the labor saving appliances that have been made in the past thirty years. And the skilled laborer of the small agricultural town, how is he to be benefited by keeping tariff on all his material? No sir, give him a chance on free raw material and you will find him making up the raw material in staple goods for the world, manufacturers springing up all over the land. The farmer says what the skilled laborer wants is cheaper living expenses and a market to compete for.

Let any farmer, day laborer, skilled laborer in any agricultural district examine the platforms of the two great political parties and say which is preferable and which is beneficial for themselves and for the whole country, free wool and other reductions submitted by the Democratic party or free whiskey and free tobacco advocated by the Republican party.

There is no chance of bringing labor back in an agricultural district even with a higher or the same tariff; therefore the only thing that will help an agricultural district is cheaper living expenses and that is what is submitted by the Democratic platform. Therefore vote for the man who has the courage to show to the country what is best for the country, even if the nabobs think they will be hurt.

Respectfully yours

GEORGE E. PAUL.

Nervous Diseases.

There are more nervous than blood diseases. Thus, a weakness of the nerves of the brain causes headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc.; as weakness of the nerves of the stomach causes dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc.; of the lungs, makes "weak lungs;" of the liver produces biliousness, constipation, etc.; of the womb induces irregularities, sterility, pains, etc.; of the sexual organs, impotency, etc. For all weaknesses Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine surpasses all other remedies. Trial bottle, free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

ONE BOTTLE CURED HIM.

A. H. Thompson, Rockford, Ill., writes: "I have been troubled with Catarrh for years, nothing helped me until I tried Papillon Catarrh Cure. I followed directions, and with less than one bottle, I am cured." Papillon, extract of flax, Catarrh Cure will positively and permanently Cure Bronchial Catarrh, Acute or Chronic Catarrh, also Rose Cold and Hay Fever. Large bottles $1.00.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

ADDRESS OF GEN. CLINTON B. FISK.

[Extract from his Detroit Speech.]

I was cradled in Michigan, chiefly taught to love liberty and to hate slavery. My poor mother's home, 50 miles out here, was a depot of the underground railway. I was reared a brakeman on that line, and subsequently became a conductor, and many a night I made my twenty miles drive toward Detroit with the slave mothers and the children covered with a horse blanket and the old wagon driving them that far toward liberty, making my beat out as far as Grass Lake, where I turned them over to another depot to be watched during the day and sent onward at night. Now, reared in that atmosphere, what could I be but a thorough anti slavery boy? An Abolitionist from my earliest remembrance, making fires in a country school house for an anti slavery society to discuss the abolition of slavery, when there would be about twenty five to talk until midnight and adjourn with at least twenty-five different opinions in the crowd as to how it was to be done. Immediate abolition, colonization and emancipation, and all other schemes, were talked until midnight, just as you discuss local option and high license and prohibition now. I remember when a little fellow, out there fifty miles from Detroit, I heard the first political glee sung, sung by a glee club from Detroit in that wonderful campaign of 1840. All the boys out there in Clinton, Mich., were Whigs, and they got their little banners ready for the celebration of the coming of the Detroit people on the way to Toledo, where Gen. Harrison was to give them a celebration at old Fort Meigs. Some of you voted for Harrison in 1840. The other day at a large camp meeting I invited those who voted for Harrison to stand, and 150 old gray headed men stood up and said "We are voting for prohibition in 1888."

It was a great getting ready time in that little village of Clinton, with which many of you have been familiar for many years. I had not any flag for my party. I stood all alone among the boys as an abolition boy. I had not any money to buy a flag; my father never would not afford for such a luxury, though I remember entering into a little partnership in a molasses candy manufactory, protected by my mother's daughter and selling out the article to a traveling circus and make ten cents; that ten cents I invested in three quarters of a yard of white cambric for a flag. I had not any painter to paint my banner, so improvised a brush with a few feathers and bristles, and with the old axle grease from the old farm wagon I, with my little banner nailed on the floor, soon painted Birney in large letters—Birney, representing Liberty. And then the people came on the appointed day, and with them brought a wonderful glee club, led by one O. F. Dodge, whom some of you heard sing, and the crowd went out to hear them sing, and we boys all went out, and in fixing up my banner I had not any flag staff; all the boys had nicely turned sticks with their Whig flags; there was but one broom in our poor cottage, and that was hardly yet ready to be superannuated (laughter) but I took the broom-stick—I remember it so well from a serious interview I had with my mother afterward (laughter.) You see, I found myself on her lap, face downward, taking a swimming lesson. (Laughter.) O, the palm of that mother's hand! Those were my palmy days, you discover. (Laughter.) But we went to the celebration, the flag and all, and the glee club from Detroit sang:

"What has caused this great commotion, all the country through?
Keep the ball a rolling for Tippecanoe and Tyler too,
And with them we will beat little Van,
Van is a used up man.

Many of you remember the old song, and Tom Palmer and I sang it down among the Connecticut people to remind them of it. And the little fellows cheered and I cheered with my flag, and the leader of the glee club said: "Boy, you get out of here with your dirty rag;" and I didn't get out; I said: "This dirty rag will swallow all your banners some day;" and they tried to wrest it from me, but the muscle and grit of the farm was too much for the village boys, and the flag conquered. In twenty years from that very day, as a young man, I was permitted to stand upon the platform and advocate the election of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States, and the old glee club singer was there, and I told the story, and they said "Your flag is going to swallow all of us," and it did. (Applause.)

C. A. Wright & Co.

The same tariff law prevails throughout the United States. The advocates of its maintenance declare that its continuance is necessary because it increases the wages paid to American workmen. If this be true a man engaged, say in the iron industry in Oregon, ought to be paid as much as his fellow citizen who does the same work in any other part of the country. The tariff rules in the Northwest as well as here in the East. Yet here are some facts gathered from the tables of wages published in the census of 1880. The average weekly wages paid to workers in blast furnaces are: In Alabama $6.81, in New Jersey $5.98, in Virginia $4.92, in Pennsylvania $6.97, and in Oregon only $3.60. Now, the tariff regulates wages, why are they not uniform for the same class of work throughout the country? Why shall a man in Pennsylvania receive $6.97 for what his brother in Oregon is paid only $3.60, if the same blessed tariff protects them both? Why does not protection give to the Oregon man the same wages that it does to the man in Pennsylvania if the tariff regulates and controls wages?

I have been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years; I had lost sense of smell entirely for the last fifteen years, and I had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as a fine a needle as ever I did. My sense of smell is partly restored and it seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for catarrh. Mrs. E. E. Interesting Facts.

Changes in the brain and nerves are the most common cause of disease. Their influence on the body is wonderful. Shame flushes the palest and fear blanches the rosiest cheek, anguish whitens the blackest hair in a night. Worry causes dyspepsia and hastens old age. Terror or excitement often causes instant death, etc. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine removes the effects of worry, overwork, alcoholic excess, morphine habit, nervousness, dyspepsia, sleeplessness, headache, neuralgia and nervous prostration. THE STUDIOUS MAN.

Out through the gates of Ispahan
One morning rode a studious man.
"Ah whither bound?" a traveler cried,
Who rested by a fountain side.
"I go to seek," replied the sage,
"The greatest wonder of the age."
"Then from your saddle now descend
And call your journey at an end,
For here within this sack I hold
The greatest wonder bought or sold."
And stooping down, the speaker drew
A cake of IVORY SOAP in view.
"No alkali this soap contains,
It leaves the lace and takes the stains;
It comes from oils, sweet as the rose
That in the palace garden grows;
It floats like cork upon the wave;
With this we may both wash and shave—"
"Enough, enough!" the student cried,
"You've say'd me from a longer ride."
And turning round his wisdom showed,
For back to Ispahan he rode.

A WORD OF WARNING.

THE WEEK IN CONGRESS.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Work of Our National Law-Makers at Washington City Carefully Condensed and Made Up in Readable Form for the Information of the People of the Country—Bills, Resolutions, Etc.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 3.—The senate had a long debate yesterday on the resolution instructing the epidemic diseases committee to report additional legislation to prevent the introduction of infectious diseases. The resolution was finally referred. It stated that the house and senate conferees on the general deficiency bill disagreed on five points—appropriating the balance of the late Chief Justice Waite's salary to his widow; extending the laws to "No Man's Land;" appropriation for a women's home in Utah, for the benefit of those seeking to escape from polygamy, being three of them. The senate agreed to insist on its disagreement. The conference report on the resolution in aid of the yellow fever sufferers was agreed to. A resolution was offered requesting the president to negotiate treaties with England and Mexico to prevent the entrance of Chinese into the United States. Hale's civil service reform committee was authorized to sit during recess, and after an executive session the senate adjourned.

McCreery presided in the house in the absence of Carlisle. The senate bill was passed allowing those who have abandoned homestead entries to make others, with amendments permitting the homesteader to leave his claim for one year, when, by reason of drought, etc., he can not support himself thereon; reducing certain lands to the uniform price of $1.25 per acre; and permitting a homesteader to enter additional land up to 160 acres when the first entry is less than that amount. The conference report on the resolution to aid the fever sufferers was adopted. It appropriates $100,000 to be expended as the president directs. A joint resolution granting one month's extra pay to senate and house employes was under discussion when the house at 1:55 adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 4.—Hoar introduced a bill in the senate yesterday fixing a day for the meeting of the presidential electors. The votes are to be cast in the electoral college on the second Monday in January. The senate substitute for the Mills tariff bill was reported and notice given that it would be called up Monday next. Hale's resolution came up calling upon the secretary of war for an explanation of the Benet circular instructing those in charge of United States arsenals to discriminate in favor of Democrats—other things being equal—when making removals or appointments until the places were equally divided. A partisan debate followed in which the sins and omissions of both parties regarding civil service reform were pretty thoroughly ventilated. The bill for the relief of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota was debated without action, and the senate adjourned.

The house passed the senate bill for the Lincoln land district in New Mexico. The conference report on the bill for the relief of the survivors of the Tallapoosa wreck was agreed to. The conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill was presented, but Dunn said it could not be agreed to without the presence of a quorum, as the friends of the Oklahoma bill would object. Pending debate the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 5.—The senate began its work yesterday by further debate on the Hale resolution relating to Gen. Benet's circular. During the debate Stewart said that the civil service law was a law to promote duplicity and lying, and it ought to be repealed. The resolution was agreed to. The bill fixing the remuneration for fourth class postoffices at a commission of 100 per cent, when the receipts are $60 per quarter or less, and 75 per cent. up to $100 per quarter, instead of 50 per cent., where the receipts are $50 or less per quarter was passed, to take effect July 1, 1888. The bill to donate the Fort Brooke military reservation at Tampa, Fla., for free schools was passed. The majority and minority reports on the tariff bill were presented and ordered printed. It ways voted—yeas, 34; nays 10—that when the senate adjourns it be to Monday, and then, after a short secret session, the senate adjourned.

The house passed the senate bill permitting the use of petroleum on steamers not carrying passengers. The conference report on the deficiency bill came up, and was debated at length, the subject of the talk being the appropriation for a home for women of Utah who desire to escape from polygamy, the end of it was the rejection of the report. Allen of Mississippi gave notice that no bills can get through to-day without a quorum, and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 6.—The only business done by the house yesterday was the passage of a concurrent resolution to appoint a select senate and house committee to investigate the alleged bad work done on the aqueduct tunnel for this city. Attempts to pass a bill authorizing the Sioux & Southwestern Railway company to bridge the Mississippi, and to consider the Nicaragua canal bill were defeated on points of no quorum. A bill was reported appropriating $186,250 to complete the improvement and dredging of the St. Clair Flats canal. A recess was taken at 5 p. m. to 8, at which time twenty-seven private pension bills were passed, and the house adjourned to Monday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 9.—The senate yesterday passed the house joint resolutions for a committee to inquire into the construction of the aqueduct tunnel for the water works of this city. Blair offered a resolution of inquiry into the execution of Louis Riel in Canada for treason in 1885, and whether said Riel was an American citizen. The senate tariff bill was then taken up, and after an unsuccessful attempt by Harris to make an agreement limiting the debate, Allison took the floor and advocated the passage of the bill in an extended speech, being followed by Vance in opposition thereto. Hiscock got the floor, and after a brief secret session, the senate adjourned.

A bill was introduced in the house appropriating $200,000 to suppress epidemic diseases on the lines of commerce in the United States. Mason of Illinois moved that the banking and currency committee be discharged from further consideration of his resolution relating to the alleged levying of contributions for political purposes on banks holding government money on deposit, but the regular order was called for. Hatch read a statement to show that plows made in Indiana were sold in Canada for $4 less than in this country. Wheeler spoke on the tariff, declaring that the senate bill was in the interest of monopolists. At 2:30 p. m. the house adjourned.

GREAT STRIKE IN CHICAGO.

The Street Car System of the North and West Sides "Tied Up."

CHICAGO, Oct. 6.—At 8:30 o'clock last night, after five hours' consultation with President Yerkes, the committee of drivers and conductors of the north side street railway system were unable to reach an agreement, and a strike was inaugurated at 3 o'clock this morning. Two hundred thousand people will therefore be temporarily, at least, without street car facilities. In the course of the conference the strikers, it is said, offered to submit the number in dispute to a board of arbitration—say to be chosen by the employes, two by the company, and these four to choose a fifth, but Mr. Yerkes declined to accede to the proposition.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—THE LATEST.—The west side men decided at 4 o'clock this morning to inaugurate strikes on all the lines in their division of the city. This action was brought about by the report of the committee that called on Mr. Yerkes at 3 o'clock this morning asking for further demands for the North side men. Mr. Yerkes asked for more time, saying he would let them know later in the day. The committee said he must decide then and there. This he refused to do, and it was so reported to the men in waiting at Seame's hall. Upon receiving this news it was unanimously decided to strike, and as soon as the last all-night car was run in—about 6 o'clock this morning—all the lines on the west side were to be tied up.

A FULL BENCH AGAIN.

Chief Justice Fuller Takes His Place in the National Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 9.—The ceremony of installation of Hon. M. W. Fuller as chief justice of the United States took place on the opening of the fall term of the supreme court yesterday. It was very simple, but the court room was crowded with prominent men and a large sprinkling of ladies, among them being Mrs. Fuller and her six daughters. Among the prominent men present was Judge Thurman, who was received with a slight outbreak of applause.

When the announcement of the opening of court had been made by the crier, the associate justices made their appearance, the chief bringing up the rear. The associate justices took their accustomed seats, but Mr. Fuller took a seat near the clerk's desk. Justice Miller, the senior associate, then announced that since the last meeting of the court a chief justice had been appointed and was now ready to receive the oath of office. Mr. Fuller then took the Bible in his hand and in a firm, clear voice, read the oath. Then he walked round back of the associates' seats, and took his own place in the center where he bowed to the supreme bench first, and then to the bar, as Justice Miller formally introduced him. He the announced that the court would do no further business than the receipt of applications for admittance to the bar, several of which were at once made and the applicants sworn in.

The court then adjourned for the day, and went in a body to make its usual call on the president, who received the members in the Blue room at the White House, where social conversation was engaged in for a few minutes, and the justices retired.

A Whole Family of Seven Persons Meet a Horrible Death.

LINCOLN, Neb., Oct. 8.—Friday night a family named Richter, farmers, living between Geneva and Ohiowa, consisting of the husband, wife and five children were all burned to death except the husband, and he will probably die. A tramp staid at the house Friday night and he was also burned to death. The origin of the fire is unknown. The tramp had been been around the neighborhood for some time and that day was drunk. Mr. Richter had also been drinking, and it is supposed that the former may have gone to sleep while smoking, and the fire thus originated.

Disaster at a Corner Stone Laying.

READING, Pa., Oct. 8.—The corner stone of the Polish Roman Catholic church, Twelfth and Spruce streets, this city, was laid yesterday afternoon. During the ceremony the floor, on which fully 2,000 men, woman and children were standing, gave way, precipitating several hundred persons to the basement, a distance of fifteen feet. Over 100 men and women were thrown in a heap, and all were more or less injured, some seriously and others fatally. The wildest excitement followed, and the good spectators became panic-stricken. Cooler heads, however, went to the rescue of the unfortunate, and the injured were taken into neighboring dwellings, and physicians hastily summoned. Later the wounded were removed to their homes and to the various hospitals by ambulances.

At Trenton on Friday Miss Annie Oakley killed 49 out of 50 live pigeons in a match with Miles Johnson for $500 a side. Johnson killed 42 out of 50.

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A serial story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

THE HISTORY OF HELEN.

In Which Some Liberties Are Taken with the Old, Old Story.

"Johnny," said Uncle Ezra, "would you like to hear about Helen of Troy?"

"No, sir," said Johnny, promptly.

"Well," said Uncle Ezra, paying no attention to Johnny's discouraging reply, "be a good boy, and I will tell you all about her.

"It happened some time prior to the Revolutionary War of 1812, a good while before that, I think. So you see your grandfather is liable to be a little misty about what took place. But as near as I can remember it was this way. Helen was a pretty laundry girl in Troy, New York, and was eventually married by the King of Troy."

"But, uncle, I didn't know they ever had kings in New York," interrupted Johnny.

"Well, sonny, you must remember that this was a good while before the Declaration of Independence was signed after the fall of Richmond.

"Putty soon there came along a good looking young man named Paris. He was the founder of Paris, Kentucky, I believe. He and Helen eloped together, which made her husband quite provoked. They had quite a war about it, and it took years and years to settle the trouble."

"But what became of Helen?"

"What became of Helen—oh—er I think that in order to avoid any future complications she went to Chicago and got a divorce from both of them."

THE OTHER TARIFF BILL ON HAND.

The Measure Reduces the Income of the Government $75,000,000. Being About Half-and-Half of Customs Duties and Internal Taxes.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 8.—The long-expected senate tariff bill was given to the public, yesterday, having been reported to the senate by Allison. The bill embodies an entire revision of the tariff schedules, and the administrative features of the present law, proposing the re-enactment of all such features as in the opinion of the majority of the committee ought not to be changed. According to the estimates made by the committee the bill provides for a total reduction of about $75,000,000, made up approximately as follows: Sugar, $27,759,000. Free list, $6,500,000. Tobacco internal revenue, $24,500,000. Alcohol in the arts, $7,000,000. Other reductions in customs, $8,000,000.

The following are the additions to the free list: Acorns, raw, dried or undried; barytes, sulphate of, or barytes unmanufactured; beeswax; books and pamphlets printed exclusively in languages other than English; braids, points, flats, laces, etc., for ornamenting hats; bristles, raw or unmanufactured; bulbs and bulbous roots not edible; chicory root, raw, dried or undried, but unground; coal slack or culm; coal tar, crude; curling stone handles; currants, Zante or other dried; dandelion roots, raw, dried or undried but ungrounds; eggs and yolks; feathers and downs of all kinds, crude and unmanufactured; jute; jute butts; manilla, ramie, sisal grass, sunn; all other textile grasses or fibrous substances unmanufactured or undressed; floor matting, known as Chinese matting; greaves and oils, such as are commonly used in soap making or wool drawing, etc.; human hair; raw, undressed, and not drawn; mineral waters, not specially enumerated; molasses testing not above 56 degrees; olive oil, for manufacturing or mechanical purposes; palm oil, or oil of palm; opium, crude, or unmanufactured (for smoking); potash, crude carbonate; potash, caustic or hydrate; potash, nitrate of, or saltpetre; soda ash; sulphate of potash; chlorate of; rags all not enumerated; hemp; seal skins; seed; sponges; sarsaparilla; tar and pitch of wood; turpentine. Fresh fish remains on the free list but with the following important reservation, "except when packed in ice or otherwise prepared for any process for preservation." Fish covered by this exception are classed with other foreign-caught preserved fish at one-half cent a pound as in the present law.

The principal reductions in the bill as stated above are made on sugar and tobacco. A synopsis of the sugar schedule is as follows: All sugars not above 16 Dutch standard, in color. Tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by polariscope not above 75 degrees, [illegible] and now [illegible] cents, and for every [illegible] degree shown by the polariscope [illegible] cent additional now [illegible] cent. All sugar above No. 16 and not above No. 20 [illegible] now 2.75. All sugar above No. [illegible] and not above No. 20, [illegible] cents now [illegible] cents. All sugars above No. 20, 4 cents, now [illegible] cents.

The internal revenue section of the bill, so far as it relates to tobacco, provides that after Feb. 1, 1889, manufacturers of cigars shall pay a special tax of $8 annually. The tax on cigars, cheroots, and on all cigarettes weighing more than three pounds per 1,000 which shall be manufactured or sold after that date shall be $1.50 per 1,000, and on cigarrettes weighing less than three pounds to the 1,000 5 cents per 1,000, and said tax shall be paid by the manufacturer. It repeals old laws restricting the disposition of tobacco by farmers and producers, and all laws imposing taxes on manufactured tobacco and snuff, and the special taxes required by law to be paid by manufacturers of and dealers in leaf tobacco, retail dealers in leaf tobacco, dealers in manufactured tobacco, snuff and cigars, peddlers of tobacco, snuff and cigars, and manufacturers of snuff. It provides for a rebate on all original and unbroken packages held by manufacturers or dealers at the time the repeal goes into effect (Feb. 1, 1889). It also repeals all laws limiting, restricting, or regulating the manufacture, sale or exportation of tobacco or snuff.

Alcohol to be used in the industrial arts is relieved from the payment of an internal revenue tax; provision is made for bonded alcohol warehouses, and safeguards are provided against fraud. There is a prohibition against the use of any distilled spirits upon which the internal revenue tax has not been paid in the manufacture of tinctures, proprietary articles, wines, liquors, cordials, bitters, or other alcoholic compounds which are used or sold as beverages.

The classification of wools is that of the present law, while the increase of duty on first and second class wools, is 1 cent per pound, wools of the third class are also increased 1 cent per pound. Small changes are made all through the wool schedule. The following are some of the most important items, the duty by the present law being put in parentheses:

Above 60 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound, and 40 per cent ad valorem. Flannels, blankets, hats, etc., valued at above 60 cents per pound, 40 cents per pound, and 40 per cent ad valorem (24 cents and 35 per cent and 35 cents and 40 per cent).

Women's and children's dress goods, Italian cloths, made part of wool and valued not exceeding 35 cents per square yard, 6 cents per square yard, 4½ per cent ad valorem (5 cents and 35 per cent), and containing an admixture of silk, and in which silk is not the component material of chief value, and not otherwise provided for, 11 cents per square yard, and in addition thereto 40 per cent ad valorem (5 cents and 35 per cent), and 7 cents and 40 per cent, according to value.

Provided that all goods of the character enumerated or described in this paragraph weighing over four ounces per square yard shall pay a duty of 40 cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem (35 and 40 per cent per pound). Women's and children's dress goods, Italian cloths, and composed wholly of wool 11 per cent per square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem (10 per cent. and 25 per cent.)

In the metal schedule it is provided that in laying and collecting the duty on iron ore no deduction shall be made from the weight of the ore on account of moisture which may be chemically or physically combined therewith. Changes are made all through the schedule, largely in classification. The duty is in most cases slightly decreased. On copper the reduction is one half, and wire rods are also considerably reduced. The duty on tin plate is not changed. Type metal is fixed at ½ cent a pound (now 20 per cent ad valorem), and new type at 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Cigars, cigarettes and cheroots, $2.50 per pound (now $3.50). If any portion of any tobacco imported in any package or in bulk shall be suitable for wrappers, the entire quantity of tobacco contained in such importations shall be dutiable, if not stemmed, at 75 cents per pound; if stemmed at $1 per pound.

Leaf tobacco, all other than that suitable for wrappers, unmanufactured and not stemmed, 20 cents per pound; stemmed, 25 cents (now 35 cents.)

After the bill had been introduced Sherman stated that he was compelled to leave the city at once and obtained permission to speak on the measure. He said that in his judgment the senate substitute was a substantial compendium of the provisions for the collection of internal revenue and customs duties. It contained a positive, unquestionable reduction of revenues to the extent of $75,688,000. The senate had enlarged the free list by adding to it certain articles which could not be produced in this country. There was not a single item in the senate bill which discriminated against sections of the country. There was a slight increase of the duty on wool, "but he hoped against hope" that the increase would be made larger by the senate. He believed that the senate bill was on the whole the best revenue bill ever introduced in congress.

MR. MORTON'S LETTER.

THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR VICE PRESIDENT ACCEPTS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Mr. Morton's letter of acceptance, addressed to Hon. M. M. Estee and others, is as follows:

GENTLEMEN:—In making formal acceptance of my nomination as the Republican candidate for the vice presidency I desire to express my grateful appreciation of the confidence reposed in me by the convention. The duties devolving on the vice president as presiding officer of the senate, and in certain contingencies as participant in the legislation of congress, make it proper that the people should know distinctly and unreservedly the political views of the candidate who may be presented to their suffrages. It is manifestly burdensome at this date for me if it is discharged by referring to the principles embodied in the resolutions that recently adopted by the national convention. Those resolutions, comprehensive and explicit as they are in character, reflect my personal convictions and have my hearty approval.

It is, of course, impossible in a political campaign to fix popular attention on more than one issue and in the province of every voter in the United States it really sees that the controlling question is whether the protective tariff duties now in force shall be so reduced as to destroy their efficiency or whether these duties shall be retained with such modifications and adjustments as shall better adapt them to the great end of protecting the vast and important industries of this whole country. The Republican platform [illegible] the Democratic party [illegible] revenue declares that this reduction must be made at the expense of these industries (see Atwell's address).

The American people have now enjoyed the protective system for a longer continuous period than ever before in the history of the national government. The result is that for more than a quarter of a century they have realized a degree of industrial and financial prosperity unprecedented in this country and never equaled in any other.

The pressing reason given for once again trying the old experiment of a revenue tariff with incidental protection as a motive or end, is that the present tariff has produced and is producing a surplus in the treasury. But is it not easily within the wisdom of congress to adjust the national income to the national expenditure without sacrificing or even imperiling an industrial system which has brought untold advantages to the entire country?

Admitting that the present tariff, by lapse of time and the large expansion of trade which it has stimulated, needs revision, is it not wiser and more patriotic to revise it with a careful regard to the interest of protection than with the purpose of lessening its protective features?

These are some of the questions which must be answered at the national polls in November. For myself, as a citizen and as a candidate, I do not hesitate to declare that from long observation I am an unwavering friend of the protective system. In a business life now extending over forty years, I have witnessed and compared the effect upon the country of a revenue tariff tending to free trade, with a protective tariff encouraging home industries. Under the former the development of the country has always been arrested, while under the latter it has uniformly been promoted.

To the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow the difference between the two systems is that of narrowing chances on the one hand and expanding opportunities on the other. Free trade would open America to competition with the whole world. Protection reserves America for Americans, native and adopted.

The industrial system of a country is as sensitive as its public credit. A hostile movement creates distrust in the public mind, and confidence—the only basis of successful trade—becomes impaired. New enterprises wither in the bud, capital grows timid, the field of labor is contracted and pressure for employment inevitably reduces the wages of all workingmen.

With the views of the convention so frankly expressed in its resolutions upon all other questions of public interest I find myself in hearty accord. In relation to silver and its important bearing upon the national currency, as well as its connection with and influence on the prosperity of large sections of our common country; in its advocacy of a judicious settlement of the public lands policy; in urging the necessity for better coast defences and the duty we owe to the shipping interests of the country, the platform but repeats approved principles of the Republican party. The Republican platform proposes a distinctly American policy; not one of narrowness and bigotry, but one broad and philanthropic, a policy that best helps the whole world by the example of a great, growing, powerful nation founded on the equality of every man before the law.

It is for the American people to develop and cultivate the continent to which in the providence of God they have fallen heirs. They should adopt a policy which looks steadily to this great end. With no spirit of narrowness toward other peoples, but rather in the highest interest of all, they should hold under their own flag a field of limitless advance in the direction of the improvement, the prosperity and the happiness of man.

Very Respectfully Yours, LEVI P. MORTON.

Report of the Land Commissioner.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 8.—Commissioner Stockslager, of the general land office, in his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, shows that during the year 8,650,194 acres of land had been conveyed or patented from the government. The statement of lands restored to the public domain during this administration is brought down to the close of the fiscal year and shows a total of 83,158,960 acres restored and 65,020,538 acres recommended for restoration. The commissioner urges the necessity of extending the public surveys, because until this is done the adjustment of railway grants and many other important matters can not be attended to.

"FOR THE GOOD OF THE SERVICE."

The editor of the Times reviews the war record of Mr. Stearns, and publishes a fac simile of a letter received in 1876 from the war department relative to his resignation.

In 1876 a correspondent charged that Mr. Stearns "resigned for the good of the service" and dare not deny it.

Mr. Stearns made an emphatic denial, and Applegate wrote to the war department, through Zach Chandler. A reply was received stating that the files showed that Lieut. Stearns resigned at the request of the Col. commanding and that the resignation was accepted "for the good of the service."

This is correct.

Mr. Stearns resigned at the request of Col. Brown.

It is well-known that the reason for the request was a personal quarrel. Stearns had been given a sick furlough, but it reached him just as he was able to join his company. He came home and requested permission to do recruiting service, but was refused the request and ordered to return on expiration of his furlough.

He devoted his time, however, to recruiting and at his own expense. He was assisted ably by Baker Cole, a corporal of the company. They induced a large number of new recruits from Rome and Franklin to join the 11th Cavalry, and many wished to go in Co. H, Mr. Stearns' company, as the Franklin recruits had nearly all been former pupils, and the Rome boys wished to be with Lt. Clark W. Decker.

Capt. H. Bowen was in poor health and contemplated resigning. The company had been reduced by death and sickness, until there were not the requisite number left to warrant the muster of a captain. It was with a view of getting a full company that Lt. Stearns induced the new recruits to join Co. H.

On arriving in camp with the men, 16 Rome boys entered Co. A. The balance, something like 35 joined Co. H. The next day they started on a march for Saltville. They were not upon the roll of Co. H, furnished arms and accoutrements by Capt. Bowen and went upon the raid. They participated in the battles of Bowen's Farm and of Saltville, at the latter place Co. H and Co. L being under command of Lieut. Stearns, Captain Bowen having one detail and Lieut. Decker another, doing other service.

Lieut. Stearns had command of the company on the retreat at the time of the fight in the mountains and was specially detailed by Col. Mason, then commanding the regiment, to command the rear battalion, with orderly W. H. Flemming, of Co. H, to assist, and he was by the side of the gallant Col. Mason when he was killed, on the final charge on the mountain.

When the regiment reached Lexington, some six weeks after, an order was issued assigning these new recruits of Co. H to other companies. Brothers were separated, and friends and tent-mates parted.

Their indignation was great, and they charged W. Stearns with selling them.

He took the boys in charge, went directly to headquarters and laid the case before Col. Brown and pleaded for a revocation of the order, but was imperiously ordered back to his quarters and informed that the Col. commanding did not desire any of his interference.

This convinced the boys that Lieut. Stearns had not consented to the work, but that the Col. had done it to prevent his muster as captain.

Lt. Stearns appealed to Gen. Burbridge for redress, but was advised that while he admitted the justice of the request, he did not wish to revoke the Colonel's order.

Lt. Stearns subsequently made use of some very bitter language regarding the Col. He had been a warm supporter of Gen. McClellan, and as war correspondent of the Free Press had scored Brown, and the latter was bound to ruin him if possible.

Stearns was summoned to headquarters and questioned as to whether he had reported the Col. as being too full of whisky to do his duty.

Mr. Stearns said he made that statement. Then came a war of words in which Lt. Stearns denounced Brown as a coward, drunkard, liar and dirty dog, and dared him to take off his eagles and settle the matter then and there.

This gave Brown the opportunity he desired. He gave Stearns the choice of resigning or being court-martialed. Mr. Stearns at first refused to resign, but there was no alternative. When asked to give a reason, he replied he had none. It was finally agreed that the reason be "at the request of the Colonel commanding." The Colonel, of course, could accept it for just such reason as he chose.

Mr. Stearns never regretted his action. It was a fight then for his boys and his rights. No one but a brutal, cowardly officer would have so insulted Co. H and the insult could not go unnoticed. Mr. Stearns now regards his denunciation of Brown as an act that he would again repeat, and he is proud of the part he played in the defense of the private soldier. If the Times has no stronger claim against his war record, it better not repeat the story to the 11th Cavalry boys, many of whom live in this congressional district.

This letter of the Times was not electrotyped at its own expense. It is the work of another man. We leave it to our readers to say who it is.

Mr. Applegate's solicitude probably comes from a desire to help the republican party. Mr. Stearns has an army record he is willing should go down to his children as evidence of his devotion to the flag.

This explanation is made, not to answer the Times, but to show the voters of the Second district what dastardly, dishonorable means are resorted to, whereby to secure votes.

I have read the foregoing and am personally knowing to the facts, which are stated truthfully and fairly as every 11th Cavalry boy of Co. H can attest. I can also add that fourteen officers of the 11th Cavalry afterward resigned, each tendering as a reason "For the good of the service."

H. BOWEN,
Late Capt. Co. H, 11th Cav.

The great success of the Royal Baking Powder is due to the extreme care exercised by its manufacturers to make it entirely pure, uniform in quality and of the highest leavening power. All the scientific knowledge, care and skill, attained by a twenty years' practical experience are contributed toward this end, and no pharmaceutical preparatian can be dispensed with a greater accuracy, precision and exactness. Every article used is absolutely pure. A number of chemists are employed to test the strength of each ingredient, so that its exact power and effect in combination with its co ingredients is definitely known. Nothing is trusted to chance and no person is employed in the preparation of the materials used or in the manufacture of the powder who is not an expert in his particular part of the business. As a consequence, the Royal Baking Powder is of the highest grade of excellence, always pure, wholesome and uniform in quality. Each box is exactly like every other, and will retain its powers and produce the same and the highest leavening effect in any climate, at any time. The Government Chemists after having analyzed all the principal brands in the market, in their report placed the Royal Baking Powder at the head of the list for strength, purity and wholesomeness, and thousands of tests all over the country have further demonstrated the fact that its qualities are, in every respect, unrivaled.

Good Reasoning.

"Ma," remonstrated Bobby, "when I was at grandma's she let me have two pieces of pie."

"Well, she ought not to have done so, Bebby," said his mother. "I think two pieces of pie are too much for little boys. The older you grow, Bobby, the more wisdom you will gain."

Bobby was silent, but only for a moment.

"Well, ma," he said, "grandma is a good deal older than you are."—Christian Advocate.

WEDDING BELLS.

Spencer Lester, of Raisin, is the lucky young man this time. Yesterday afternoon he led to the marriage altar Miss S. Libbie Coddington, daughter of A. P. Coddington, Esq. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon a merry company gathered at Mr. Coddington's farm home, northwest of the village, to witness the nuptial ceremonies. At the appointed hour the bride and groom appeared and took their position beneath a beautiful floral horseshoe suspended from the ceiling in the parlor. The knot was appropriately tied by Rev. C. S. Lester, of Benton Harbor, an elder brother of the groom, assisted by Rev. F. Adkins of this village. The congratulations and good wishes of the friends present consumed half an hour, and a menu was then served to which all did ample justice. Most of the guests tarried nearly the entire evening, and the hours were whiled away in social converse, music and mirth. The Raisin Glee Club favored the company with a few choice selections from their repertoire, which were heartily encored. A pleasanter wedding party it has seldom been our ortune to attend.

Many guests were present from abroad, relatives and friends of the family. Rev. C. S. Lester and wife, of Benton Harbor; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Clanbarty, Misses Poucher and Goodsell, of Adrian; J. H. Cole and wife, of Weston; J. E. Teeter, wife and daughters, of Manchester; E. A. Coddington, of Morenci; Rev. L. C. Chase and wife, of Raisin; Mrs. Wm. Windle of Brooklyn; Mrs. T. P. Earl, of Monroeville, Ohio; C. H. Beardsley, G. H. Winship and wife, A. C. Green and wife, of the Raisin Glee Club.

The wedding gifts comprised both the useful and the ornamental, and made a beautiful display in the large bay window of the drawing room. Prominent among them were a costly gold watch from the parents of the bride, a set of solid silver table cutlery from the parents of the groom, a similar set from Mr. and Mrs. Clanbarty, an elegant mantel clock from the Raisin Glee Club, (of which the groom is a member) as a gentle reminder, we suppose, that he should always be on time at his meals.

Believing that the old custom of a wedding trip is more honored in the breach than in the observance, the bridal pair proceeded directly to their home in Raisin at the close of the evening's festivities, where they will reside for the present with the parents of the groom.

The young couple who have thus joined their hearts together need no introduction to our readers. Both are well-known in Tecumseh and Raisin, and both are honored with an extended circle of warm hearted friends. In addition to the usual congratulations which are showered upon them is the rejoicing that their home will continue to be among us and that their church and society circles are not to lose their presence, their good-will and their zealous work.

DIED.—James Updyke, Sen., passed quietly away on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 27th, 1888. He was born in the town of Fayette, Seneca county, New York, Oct. 1, 1803, and with his kind and indulgent wife came to Michigan in an early day. They cleared and improved a good farm in the town of Tecumseh, where they both spent their last days, she being taken away Nov. 30, 1873. He was then left to bear the trials of his declining years alone, until he was moved by death to his final resting place. He was the father of eleven children, only five of whom survive him. The funeral was held at his old home on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Williams, of Clinton. COM.

Farmers often deceive themselves by thinking they cannot afford to buy a horse blanket. When horses are not blanketed in cold weather, if they keep in good condition, they must eat more to keep warm than a horse blanket will cost. When spring comes a horse that has been blanketed winter is usually worth $50 to $100 more than one which has not been blanketed. It's money in the farmer's pocket to blanket his horses. The 5-A horse blanket manufacturers, whose attractive advertisements are appearing in our paper, are filling a long-felt want among farmers by making strong horse blankets which wear well. No cloth is more deceiving than horse blanket cloth, for weak blankets which will not wear can be made to look as well as strong ones. This firm is wise in using printer's ink to tell farmers how they can buy a good blanket, and in selecting the columns of this paper, which has a large circulation throughout the county.

The following notice, taken from the last issue of the Milford Times will be of interest to the members of the M. E. church: "A large number of the friends of Rev. J. S. After a short time spent in greetings and conversation Massam Pearson approached the elder, and in a few hearty words handed him a purse of $35, tendered to him by those present as a token of friendship and regard for him as a pastor, and also of their appreciation of his successful labors in this church during the past year. Mr. Joslin responded briefly and an-

The New York Daily Graphic has made a wise and bold stroke in securing the services of Thomas Nast the most wonderful cartoon artist of his day. This great sketcher will find plenty of work for his ready pen in picturing for the readers of The Graphic the important questions before the people during the present campaign. The examples of Nast's work that have thus far appeared in the Graphic show that he has lost none of his old time vigor and aptness in outlining the events which he attempts to picture. The services of so conscientious a man as Nast, who only allows his pen to follow the dictates of his judgment, will prove a valuable acquisition to the democracy of the country. We are informed that all of Nast's work for the Daily Graphic will be published in the Weekly Graphic. The latter publication is one of the best illustrated journals in the country, and contains nearly double the number of pictures and quantity of select reading matter that is given by Harper's Weekly or Frank Leslie and at about half the cost (subscription price of the Weekly Graphic $2.50 per year); therefore, no one who feels interested in the return of Thomas Nast to the caricaturing world need be without the paper containing his work. Send for sample copy to The Daily and Weekly Graphic, 39 and 41 Park Place, New York.

A MONSTER MEETING.

The Republicans Fill the Opera House and Turn Hundreds Away to an Overflow Meeting on the Street Saturday Evening.

Colored lights, fire-crackers, Roman candles, sky rockets, and plenty of noise, formed a prelude to the republican meeting at the Opera House Saturday night. It was intended to raise a pole corner of Chicago and Ottawa sts., in the afternoon, but the wet weather made it necessary to postpone operations, and Tuesday afternoon was selected for the raising. As early as seven o'clock the opera house began to fill up and by eight every chair was occupied except about 150 reserved for the Adrian delegation. The special train from Adrian was expected at 7:30 o'clock, but did not arrive until nearly nine. It consisted of six coaches loaded with about 400 persons, including the Youth's, the Young Men's and the Adrian Republican club, the Logan Glee club of that city and the Adrian City Band. The two first clubs were in uniform carrying torches and presented a handsome appearance. The procession formed on Chicago street, including the Tecumseh City Band and marched thro' the principle streets, bringing up at the opera house, where as many as could marched in and filled up the reserved chairs and also the stage, and still there was hundreds that could not gain admission, and Capt. Graves of Adrian was called out to address them.

The program had already commenced with singing by the glee club. Several campaign songs were rendered and received with shouts of applause by the audience and the gentlemen certainly merited it. The speaker of the evening, Gen. Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, was then introduced by A. W. Mills. The General presented one of the strongest arguments for the republicans listened to this fall and spoke nearly two hours. He attempted to close his speech twice during the evening, but shouts of "go on" from the audience induced him to proceed, and it was after 11 o'clock when he finished. He is a clear, forcible speaker, and his empty coat sleeve bears testimony of his services in the late war. His term of Minister to England, makes him at home on all questions relating to that side of the tariff question, and the evil effects of free trade as seen in that country. We present a brief synopsis of his speech below:

"My friends, I have not come from Wisconsin to Michigan expecting I could tell you something new, nor have I the slightest idea I can instruct you in political duties. I am very glad to speak for your candidate for congress, and I am very glad to speak a word to Michigan republicans for our standard bearer, Ben. Harrison, a man I have known well for years and have respected highly. I am very glad to say a word also for one of the very best men I know, Levi P. Morton, whose pocket and hand is always open. He is the freest-hearted man I know. I am very glad to know that there is no man running on any republican ticket in Michigan, or the United States—never has been, nor never will be any man who left the service for the service's good in the rebellion. I refer to no one especially. I want to tell my good democratic friends here you will never find that sort of man in the republican party. There are a good many issues before the people this year. Perhaps the most important issue is that which touches your pocket, and no matter how patriotic we may be my friends, in time of peace that which touches our pockets in a material way is that which will govern us. We have touched more on the tariff than any other subject because it relates to our pocket. In the first place I want to tell you that I was fed upon democratic tariff policy, and was born and bred in a tariff for revenue policy until the democratic party—the lower half—began to blow gun powder at me. I discovered in the war an argument in favor of protection. I found there was eleven million people attempting to divide this union. They had taken up arms against the government. The republican part said no; the democratic party having fallen in power, sat quietly and allowed the ground work for that work to go on. I found that within six months the confederacy had been laying the foundation for purely agriculture states. They had no factories, they were dependent on the outside world for the supplies necessary to carry on the rebellion and the blockade by the northern ships was one of the chief factors in crushing it. The free trade policy they had pursued always, and which they are trying to pursue now, had brought them to that state of dependence and they depended on the outside world for the necessaries of life.

I find that in the history of this country, whenever the democrat party had reduced the tariff below the protective point there had been disaster in this country, and when the republicans had raised the tariff above there had been prosperity. In 1858-59 do there was great distress in this country, thousands were thrown out of employment, and capital was lying idle. In the early days nearly all the articles in your families and worn on your backs, were products of the English workmen, but within ten years a revolution takes place. Four-fifths of all the articles on the shelves of the store are the products of American manufacturers. This tariff question to me in my position is this—I want my country independent of all the countries on the face of the earth. I want my country to be able to clothe itself, feed itself, house itself, and not be obliged to call upon any other people on the face of God's footstool for anything. Every democratic speaker says the tariff is a tax, and the President himself says that when we buy an article upon which there is a tax the amount of tariff is added to the article. Is that true? He forgets to tell us that when you or I go England we are buying goods at the market in competition with Englishmen. If our manufacturing establishments are producing enough of the same goods to supply this country the English manufacturers must push his goods down to the lowest point. The duty dont come out of the consumer. It is paid by the English manufacturer. Frank Hurd says the tariff has nothing to do with and does not effect wages, that we would give the same wages to our workman we give now. Now I want to say that the average wages paid for skilled and unskilled labor is double in America what they are in England. I have statistics to prove it. I have been through Lancashire, Eng., called the "black country" because of the dense clouds of furnace smoke. I have seen hundreds of families living in a single room, some have two rooms. Three and four families are herded like animals. It would break your heart to walk through the country and see the distress of the workmen in England. They say he can live cheaper in this country: pork, lard, oatmeal, eggs, butter, corn meal and many other things are cheaper here. Rent is high in this country and the Mills bill says it shall continue to be. Every article you use in your family not covered by a patent, is cheaper than it was in 1860. Everything you wear is cheaper, and the workmen as a whole, are receiving nearly fifty per cent more wages. And this has been brought about by our republican protective system that has kept our workmen at work right at home.

I am interested in farms in Wisconsin and they tell us there that our farming community is being taxed for the benefit of the monopolies. We, to-day consume more than 92 per cent of all the food raised in this country. More than that it is sold and consumed right here at your door at better prices than in 1860 under the low tariff days of the democrat party. Shall we continue this policy or shall we not? The laboring men in this country use more food than any other country. I tell you democratic friends sixty-two millions of people comprise a better market than any other country. We use three times what they do in France, and ten times what they use in South America. We have the best market in the world and we propose to keep it. We do not propose, and will never consent to a reduction of taxation that shall at the same time destroy our American industries. We never will consent to what you call taxation that will bring our workmen down to the cheap pauper labor of Europe."

Accidents to the fast trains are said to be no more frequent than to the slow poking passenger, since greater care is taken in running the fliers. But the get-there train on the D. L. & N. between Grand Rapids and Detroit came near going to pieces of Lansing the other night. While pulling into that city on the double quick the engineer discovered a misplaced switch ahead, and, setting the air-brakes and reversing the engine, he and his fireman jumped just in time to save their lives. The engine went into the ditch on its back, and, although the passengers were considerably shaken up, all escaped injury, thanks to the engineer's presence of mind.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

The Membership of the Order Falling Off Considerably.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Oct. 8.—In commenting on the resignation of Thomas Barry of the general board Knights of Labor, Homer L. McGaw, ex-master workman of district assembly No. 3 said Sunday night that the membership of the order has fallen off considerably within the last two years.

Ex-Master Workman Joseph L. Evans of district assembly No. 3 said: "Tom Barry's sickness has impaired his mind and he does not know what he is talking about. The order will not go to pieces in a thousand years. Notwithstanding Powderly's declaration he will be a candidate, and he will be defeated, too."

Regarding the membership the report made at the general assembly at Hamilton, Ont., in 1885 was 548,292; at Richmond, 1886, about 724,000; at Minneapolis, 1887, 482,791; at present, 260,571. A New Bridge at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 8.—The Merchants' Bridge company, which was organized two years ago to build another bridge across the river at the north end of the city, has at last got down to business. Plans have been adopted and the site has been selected. The structure will span the river at the front of Ferry street. Three spans of about 600 feet each and the usual long approaches will be built. The bridge will be used for railroad traffic exclusively, unless $500,000 of bonds are taken by the citizens of north St. Louis, in which event a wagon road will also be constructed. The bridge will be about two and a half miles north of the present bridge, and will cost $1,000,000. All the necessary franchises have been secured. The enterprise is a movement against Gould.

A Stone Thrower Shot and Killed.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—Near Winnetka, fifteen miles north, Sunday afternoon, a party returning from a outing excursion on Gross Point were followed by three young farmers, who made insulting remarks and threw stones. They were warned back by Peter Mersch, son of a wealthy and respected citizen of South Evanston, but continued their tirade of stones. Finally the wife of Mersch was hit, and then himself, when he turned and fired. Peter Poehse, one of the aggrieved party, fell, and expired almost instantly. The party continued their way to South Evanston, where Mersch gave himself up to the authorities.

A Great Demand for Cars.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—Gen. G. W. Dodge of the Union Pacific railroad said Sunday that he was of the opinion that two new railroads to the Pacific coast would be built from the longitude of Denver. The business would make them practicable. He had never seen such a demand for cars as there was now, he said. The Union Pacific was short from 200 to 400 cars on every division. Business started in early on account of the crops. They were not good in the western part of Kansas, but were all right in Texas, Colorado and other points west of the Mississippi.

CROSSING THE JORDAN.

LESSON II, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 14.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. iii, 5-17—Commit Verses 5, 6—Golden Text, Isa., xliii, 2. Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After the Lord had encouraged Joshua, as in our last lesson, the people also encouraged him by promising obedience and by praying the Lord to be with him (i. 16-18). Then follows the record of the two spies sent to Jericho, their reception and protection by Rahab, their promise of deliverance to her and all belonging or related to her and the true token of the scarlet line to be bound in her window.

5. "Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." If we were more separate from sin and unbelief, we would see more of the wonderful works of God. In one place Jesus could not do many mighty works because of their unbelief; and there is no doubt but the unbelief and worldliness of Christians today hinders His doing wonders among us.

6. "Take up the ark of the covenant and pass over before the people." To the people he had said: "Sanctify yourselves," and now these are his orders to the priests, who were always supposed to be sanctified, inasmuch as they were set apart for the special service of the sanctuary. All true believers are priests unto God (Rev. i, 5; v, 10) and should ever consider themselves set apart to His service.

7. "I will begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel." God always honors those who honor Him, and yet the honor is all His own and shows forth His glory, for this is the great end of our existence, to glorify God. When the apostles, filled with the spirit, spoke and wrought in the name of Jesus, the people wondered, and took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

8. "Stand still in Jordan." With their feet in the water, they were to stand on the brink of Jordan and see the wonders of the Lord. They were to march right into the river ere the waters would divide; we are to go right forward, even though it seem impossible, and He will at the right time open the way, not an hour or a day too soon, but sometimes as it seems only when we have gone to the last extremity and cannot take another step.

10. "The living God is among you." Jeremiah calls Him "the true God, the living God and an everlasting king." (Jer. x, 10.) Darius calls Him "the living God and stedfast forever." (Dan. vi, 26.) Jesus Himself, appearing to John in Patmos, says, "I am the First and the Last and the Living One, alive forevermore." (Rev. i, 17, R. V.) If we lived near to God as Jeremiah or Daniel or John, our lives would testify that the God whom we serve is a living God, a life-giving God, ever present and working in and through us.

"He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites." It is implied here that He will do this through them as His servants and soldiers, they being obedient to Him and He fighting with them and in them against their enemies. Now we find they were not obedient, and consequently Jebusites and Canaanites and others were not completely driven out, but became thorns and snares to them. (Judges i, ii.)

11. "The ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth." This is the first time that we find this title in full; it reminds us of the words of Melchizedek, "the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth" (Gen. xiv, 19); and the expression in the prophets, "the Lord of the whole earth" (Isa. liv, 5; Mich. iv, 13; Zech. iv, 14; vi, 5), and the thought that our Redeemer is the Lord of all the earth (v. 13) should make us very joyful in Him, and ready to trust Him under all circumstances, obey Him at all times and love Him with the whole heart, extolling Him in every possible way.

12. "Take twelve men out of the tribes of Israel." The reason for choosing these twelve is found in the next chapter: They were to take twelve stones from the midst of Jordan, where the priests' feet stood who bore the ark, and set them up for a memorial on the other side of Jordan, so that they could in days to come point their children to those stones and tell them how their fathers had come over Jordan on dry land; Joshua also set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan where the priests had stood. These two memorials testified to the mighty hand of the Lord, that Israel might fear the Lord their God forever, and that all the earth might know the hand of the Lord (iv, 24).

13. "It shall come to pass." How could Joshua speak so positively about this very unlikely event? Why did he not speak more cautiously and say, we trust or hope that it will thus come to pass, or we will try and see what can be done? He believed God; he knew His power; he had not a shadow of a doubt but that it would be just as God had told him.

"As soon as the soles of the feet of the priests shall rest in the waters." Not as they drew nigh, nor before they came to the river, but only when their feet actually stood in the water. Who can tell how many victories we lose by being afraid, by holding back because of difficulties, instead of going right forward into the difficulty in the name of the Lord? We have only to be sure that we are obeying His command, doing His will, seeking His glory and not our own, and then let neither men nor devils, giants nor walled cities, fire nor water terrify nor dismay us.

14-16. "And it came to pass." When God speaks it must come to pass; it must always be just as He says, even as when in the beginning God said "Let there be light," and there was light. He only needs to speak and it is done. Blessed are those who believe, for there shall be a performance of the things told us from the Lord. Unbelief says, "I wish I could feel that," or "I will try and believe." As to the former, remember the word to doubting Thomas, "Blessed are they that have not seen, yet have believed." As to the latter, remember that trying to believe is equal to saying that God is not worthy of your confidence; and just ask yourself what reply you would make to one who said to you, "I will try and believe you." If you are a Christian and have not joy and peace under all circumstances—I do not say in all circumstances, for some are anything but joyous—but joy and peace in the Lord, whatever your surroundings be; if you have not these, it is because you do not believe God, and your mind is not stayed on Him (Isa. xxvi, 3; Phil. iv, 4-7; 1 Thess. v, 18).

17. "The priests stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan." The midst of a river is not a place to look for dry ground, nor is a wall of such unstable material as water likely to encourage one to stand firm; but the One whose name is Wonderful was with them and was doing wonderously. Fire, air, earth or water are all the same to Him so far as helps or hindrances are concerned; He walks through the fire unharmed and enables mortal men to do the same; He walks on the sea and enables Peter to do likewise; He mounts through the air with equal ease, and so do Enoch and Elijah. If we would only believe that He is ever in our midst we would stand unmoved on firm footing under all circumstances, for His presence means power and victory over all enemies.

THE ORIGIN OF PHRASES.

Strange Derivation of Several Common Expressions.

Dido, Queen of Tyre, about seven centuries before Christ, after her husband had been put to death by her brother, fled from the city and established a colony on the north coast of Africa. Having bargained with the natives for as much land as could be surrounded with a bull's hide, she cut the hide into narrow strips, tied them together, and claimed all the land that could be surrounded with the line thus made. She was allowed to have her way, and now when one plays a sharp trick he is said to "cut a dido."

A tailor of Samarcand, Asia, who lived off a street leading to the burying ground, kept near his shop an earthen pot, in which he was accustomed to deposit a pebble whenever a body was carried to its final resting-place. Finally the tailor died, and seeing the shop deserted, a person inquired what had become of the former occupant. "He has gone to the pot himself," was the reply of one of the deceased's neighbors.

During a battle between the Russians and Tartars, a private soldier of the former cried out, "Captain, I've got a Tartar." "Bring him along," said the officer. "He won't let me," was the response. Investigation proved that the captive had the captor by the arm and would not allow him to move. So "catching a Tartar" is applicable to one who has found an opponent too powerful for him.

In ancient times the English were wont to cover the floors with rushes, and when visitors of distinction were expected fresh rushes were substituted for the old. The change was not made if the visitors were ordinary people, who were regarded "not worth a rush;" later, "not worth a straw."

Formerly in London, when a small dealer bought bread of a baker, for every dozen loaves purchased, he was given an extra loaf as his profit; from which circumstance a "baker's dozen" signifies thirteen. Various origins have been assigned to the phrase, but the above is the only one that is based on a sure foundation.

In a work, "Essays from the Desk of Poor Robert the Scribe," published in 1815, the author, C. Mider, tells the story of a boy, who, by the offer of a liberal compensation, was induced to turn a grindstone for a man who desired to sharpen his axe. The promised compensation was never paid; of one who disguises his own selfish aims under an appearance or disinterestedness it is remarked: "He has an axe to grind."

The Highland Crofters.

The crofters are a class of people living in the highlands of Scotland and in the islands north and west of that country. They are tenants or holders of small portions of land called crofts, land which lies in a valley or glen closely inclosed by hills. The crofts are small—at most but a few acres. Simple cottages, often rude and inconvenient—are built, the crofters cultivate their bit of land, own a few cows and sheep, and live in a certain kind of comfort; at least they did a hundred years ago, and some of them continue to do so yet.

The houses of the crofters are usually divided into three rooms, a kitchen, a bedroom and a room for the cattle, all being sheltered under the same roof. If some cottages of the better kind have more accommodations, others are far less commodious, there often being no separating line between the family and the cattle. The land in Scotland requires much cultivation, and the crofters work hard for a living. If crops are scanty any year, they are forced to sell some of their cows or sheep to buy food. In connection with the crofts there are usually mountain pasture lands, which are used in common as grazing places for sheep and cattle. The women make their clothing from the wool, and oat meal and milk are their chief food.

Very simple are the crofters in their mode of life; they are able to obtain little education, and the struggle for bread is too continuous to allow much recreation, except what may be found in social intercourse when the hard day's work is done. But the highland crofter is brave, kind, courteous, and honest by nature, and his attachment to his native land is strong as life itself. He loves his wild, barren, health covered fells; he loves his sheltered glen, his lowly cottage. It is his home—has been, perhaps, the home of his ancestors for generations—and no motive of gain or hope of bettering his condition would tempt him to leave his native land, or the special spot which has long been home, unless absolute lack of bread compelled.

Many times during the present century the crofters have been treated with great severity, and even cruelty, by the owners of the land on which they live or by their managing "factors" or agents. So that in many parts of the highlands and adjacent islands they are now reduced to a most deplorable condition, and their grievances have attracted much attention, not only in Great Britain, but in this and other countries.

The Honesty of Women.

Women are being employed more and more as book-keepers and cashiers, and one avowed ground of this employment is that they are more honest than men. Unquestionably they are so up to this time, and it is probable that they will have some permanent advantage in that way. Their normal instincts are somewhat higher and their temptations less on the side of perilous influences. But it has been pointed out more than once by the more cautious friends of women that a good deal of the present moral advantages of that sex in matters of honesty comes simply from inexperience. They have hitherto had so little to do with the direct handling of money that they regard it with more reverence than men; the bare thought of an irregularity alarms them, the conscience is wholly fresh and sensitive; they cannot conceive how a person can wrong another out of a dime and live. Moreover, they overrate the difficulties and perils consequent on wrong doing. A young book-keeper told me once that whenever her accounts failed to balance, if it were only by a single cent, she felt as if a policeman were just coming in at the door. It is as we find the case to be with lending money—any prudent person would rather lend it to a woman than to a man because he knows that the chance of repayment is greater. In the present state of society a debt of $5 seems a tremendous affair to a woman and a very small affair to a man; but let that woman borrow and repay a few times, and the fine edge of sensibility begins to wear off, precisely as it does with a man, but more slowly.

DOCTORING OLD TIME.

A Striking Picture—A Revival of Old Time Simplicities.

In one of Harper's is-ues is given a very fine illustration of Roberts' celebrated painting, known as "Doctoring Old time." It represents a typical old-timer, with his bellows, blowing the dust from an ancient clock, with its cords and weights carefully secured. One of these clocks in this generation is appreciated only as a rare relic.

The suggestive name, "Doctoring Old Time," brings to our mind another version of the title, used for another purpose,—"Old Time Doctoring."

We learn, through a reliable source, that one enterprising proprietary medicine investigating the formulas and medical preparations used in the beginning of this century, and even before, with a view of ascertaining why people in our great-grandfathers' time enjoyed a health and physical vigor so seldom found in the present generation. They now think they have secured the secret of secrets. They found that the prevailing opinions that then existed, that "Nature has a remedy for every existing disorder," was true, and acting under this belief, our grandparents used the common plants and herbs. Continual trespass on the forest domain, has made these herbs less abundant and has driven them farther from civilization, until they have been discarded as remedial agents because of the difficulty of obtaining them.

H. H. Warner, proprietor of Warner's safe cure and founder of the Warner observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has been pressing investigations in this direction, into the annals of old family histories, until he has secured some very valuable formulas, from which his firm is now preparing medicines to be sold by all druggists.

They will, we learn, be sold under the general name of "Warner's Log Cabin Remedies." Among these medicines will be a "sarsaparilla," for the blood and liver, "Log Cabin hops and buchu remedy, for the stomach, etc., "Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy," Log Cabin hair tonic," "Log Cabin extract," for internal and external use, and an old valuable discovery for catarrh, called Log Cabin rose cream." Among the list is also a "Log Cabin plaster," and a "Log Cabin liver pill."

From the number of remedies, it will be seen that they do not propose to cure all diseases with one preparation. It is believed by many that with the introduction of these remedies a new era is to dawn upon suffering humanity and that the close of the nineteenth century will see these roots and herbs, as compounded under the title of Warner's Log Cabin remedies, as popular as they were at its beginning. Although they come in the name of proprietary medicines yet they will be in the less welcome, for suffering humanity has become sick of modern doctoring and the public has great confidence in any remedies put up by the firm of which H. H. Warner is the head. The people have become suspicious of the effects of doctoring with poisonous drugs. Few realize the injurious effects following the prescriptions of many modern physicians. These effects of poisonous drugs, already prominent, will become more pronounced in coming generations. Therefore we can cordially wish the old-fashioned new remedies the best of success.

FENCING IN DUELLING.

The Disposing of Differences by Fighting Originated in Barbarism.

In a country like France where dueling is sanctioned by the social code and practically permitted by the law, fencing must be held in high esteem.

Duelling with swords is certainly a braver and manlier method of disposing of differences than a resort to the brutal and stupid bullet. With us the lesson taught by Hamilton's death has been deep and precious.

It it not thought necessary to prove a man's valor by a personal encounter, and the moral sense of our people, supported by our legislation, likens the killing of a man by a prearranged encounter to deliberate murder.

It is a mistake, however, to suppose that the custom of duelling was a plant indigenous to Latin civilization. Its origin is distinctly barbarous, Scandinavian probably.

It is stated that a Teuton once sent a challenge to Marius. This statesman was so ignorant of what is usual among gentlemen that he declined, simply stating, "If he is in a hurry to die, let him hang himself."

Perhaps the world would be none the worse if the same answer were given in more modern cases.

The Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.:

Gentlemen—I can cheerfully and truthfully say that S. S. S. is the greatest blood purifier on earth. In 1884 I contracted blood poison. Physicians treated me with no good results. I took a half dozen different kinds of blood medicines, but, without receiving any permanent relief! I was induced to try S. S. S. I began the first bottle with the gravest doubts of success. I had been so often deceived. But improvement came, and I continued its use until perfectly well. I have since married, and have a healthy family. No trace of the disease is seen. Swift's Specific did all this for me, and I am grateful. Yours truly, J. S. SPEARE, 129 Dale Ave.

A CLAIM TO HUMAN GRATITUDE

Charlotte Corday, the sad-faced tender-hearted peasant girl of Normandy made great history by one desperate act!

Sickened by the saturnalia of the French revolution, and moved to desperation as Robespierre and Marat were leading the flower of France to the guillotine, she determined that she would put an end to Marat's bloody reign.

Marat had demanded two hundred thousands victims for the guillotine!

He proposed to kill off the enemies of the Revolution to make it perpetual!

Terrible thought!

No wonder it fired the blood of this patriotic peasant maid!

Gaining access to his closely guarded quarters by a subterfuge, she found him in his bath, even then inexorable and giving written directions for further slaughter!

He asked her the names of the immoral deputies who had taken refuge in Caen. She told him and he wrote them down. "That is well. Before a week is over they shall all be brought to guilotine."

At these words, Charlotte drew from her bosom the knife, and plunged it with supernatural force up to the hilt in the heart of Marat.

"To me, to me, my dear friends, come to me," cried Marat, and expired under the blow!

In the Corcoran gallery at Washington is a famous painting of Charlotte represented as behind the prison bars the day before her execution.

It is a thrilling, sad picture, full of sorrow for her suffering country, and of unconquerable hate for her country's enemies.

What a lesson in this tragic story. Two hundred, nay, five hundred thousand people would Marat have sacrificed to his unholy passion of power.

Methods are quite as murderous and inexorable as then, and they numbers their victims by the millions!

The pages of history are full of murders by authority and by mistaken ideas. The practice of medicine in the low many hundreds of ignorant have been allowed to die and a hundred more killed by unscrupulous quacks and by quackery.

But the age is bettering. Men and methods are improving. A few years ago it was with the majority of people the death of a patient to be treated by a proprietary medicine. Today there are not two physicians in any town in this country who do not, in fact, prescribe some form of proprietary remedy.

H. H. Warner, famous all over the world as the discoverer of Warner's Safe Cure, began building up the old home of the Log Cabin herbs and roots, and patiently research he succeeded in compounding one of the most valuable family records, and called them Warner's Log Cabin remedies. The simple preparations of roots, leaves, balsams and herbs which were the successful standbys of our grandfathers. These simple old fashioned sarsaparilla, hops and buchu, cough and consumption and other remedies have struck a popular chord and are in extraordinary demand all over the land. They are not the untried and imaginary remedies of some alleged chemist intent on making money, but the long-sought principles of the healing art which for generations kept our ancestors in perfect health, put forth for the good of humanity by one who is known all over the world as a philanthropist—a lover of his fellow man,—whose name is a guarantee of the highest standard of excellence.

The preparations are of decided and known influence over disease and as in the hands of our grandmothers they raised up the sick, cured the lame, and bound up the wounds of death, so in their new form put olden power as Log Cabin remedies, they are sure to prove the health of the nations.

Corday did the world an incal. cula. service in killing France of the bigoted and murderous Marat just as this man is doing humanity a service by re-introducing to the world the simpler and better methods of our ancestors.

Women Smokers of Russia.

All Russians smoke cigarettes and delight to hold a gallon of carbon in their lungs and then roll it out like steam from a 'scape pipe. In Southern Russia and the Caucasus the women—matrons, and even some unmarried ones—smoke almost as universally as the men.

I have had, two or three times, nicely dressed ladies step up to me in a railroad station or on the platform and beg of me a light. I suppose this arose from my having a cigar, from which a better light could be had than from the cigarette of another.

In Northern Russia and at St. Petersburg I have seen but two women with cigarettes, and think they were travelers. I am told conservatives few here smoke.—St. Petersburg Letter to Chicago Mail.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

T. A. SLOCUM, M. C. 181 Pearl st., New York

FIVE PIRATES BEHEADED

A Former Naval Officer Tells the Story of a Bloody Execution in China.

While attached to the United States steamer Wachusett, then cruising in the waters of the Asiatic station, we happened to be sent to Canton to protect some of the American merchants who fancied that the Chinese, who had been making threats, were going to give them trouble.

On one occasion we were ashore under the guidance of a Chinaman and seeing everything curious that was to be seen, when through the streets came a large body of troops guarding five men carried in flat baskets suspended on bamboo rods from the shoulders of coolies.

"Sam, what are they going to do with those men?" we asked.

"Oh," said he, "they are pirates and the troops are going to cut off their heads."

We followed and in a short time came to an open square just off one of the main thoroughfares of the city. The soldiers filed in on each side and the mandarin, who wrote the blue button, seated himself in a chair.

A great crowd of people had followed and the sentinels at the gate had great trouble in keeping them back. We were in uniform, and when we were seen by the officer of the guard he called the attention of the mandarin to the fact.

We were immediately escorted to a place of honor beside the mandarin, who rose and bowed his respects, and told our guide to explain to us why he was there and why those five men were to lose their lives.

They had been caught in the act of piracy on the high seas by an English gunboat and turned over to the Chinese authorities for trial and punishment. They had had speedy trial, the act of piracy having been committed six days before.

When the explanation was given the prisoners were made to kneel on the ground in line, their queues were cut and spread on the backs of the victims, and the executioner took his place. A bright sword was given to him by the officer of the guard, and he took a few practice cuts in the air to get the exact range. A feeling of intense excitement and anxiety was felt.

A command was given, the executioner walked to the side of the first man and, swift as a flash, narrowly missed from under his robe as after the order. The supreme moment had come, five lives were to be taken. The men in the rear could see every movement of the executioner and of the man in front of him. To the Scottish barbarian" it was a fearful moment.

A command was given, and in an instant the knife was in the air and in the next moment a head lay on the ground. A great fountain of blood spurted from the neck, and the executioner was beside the next man. Again the command, and a headless body the result, and in less than the time it takes to write this line the five men were beheaded.

We ran to the bodies in our curiosity to see if any muscular action was taking place, but there was none beyond the slowly closing eyelids. The law was vindicated. The troops formed in line, the heads were put in the baskets that lately carried the bodies of the pirates, and the march was resumed through the city.

The bodies were thrown into a cart and taken for burial outside the city. In answer to our question as to what would be done with the five heads, we were told that they would be placed on the walls of the city as a warning to all evil doers.—New York Mail and Express.

THE GAME OF POLO.

Where It Originated and the Growth of Its Popularity.

Polo, or hockey on horseback, as it is sometimes called, is the national game of the people of Gilgit, a mountainous country to the northeast of Cashmere.

Reports had reached India, by way of Cashmere, that the Gilgittis were a race of blue eyed Kaffirs (unbelievers in Mohammed), and it was suggested that they were probably the descendants of one of Alexander's settlements, and to solve this question the Punjab government in the spring of 1866 deputed Dr. Gottlieb Lietner to visit the country and inquire into the history and language of the people.

As far as concerns that matter, the language of Gilgit was proved to be a sister language of Sanscrit, and not like Hindi or Greek, a daughter language; but the point of interest for us is that Dr. Lietner took as much interest in the national game of polo as in the language, and persuaded three natives of the country to return with him to British India and bring their ponies and polo sticks along with them.

The party reached Sakon, the capital of the Punjab, sometime in August, 1866, and the game having been discussed at government house a couple of teams were got up and the day fixed for the trial games, which all the European residents turned out to witness.

The teams were composed of Capt. Charles Marshall, Lieut. Pemberton, Lieut. R. Nicholetts, Mr. C. F. Amery, Dr. Leitner, Serdan Mohammed, Hyath Khan, the three Gilgittis and one other, and the game thus inaugurated, rapidly acquired popularity, clubs being established promptly at all the military stations.

The game was played with an energy, and with such speedy ponies of Arab stock that severe casualties were frequent, so much so that considerable pressure was brought to bear on the army authorities to put a stop to it, but they wisely declined, and the game was soon transported to English soil, where it flourished freely, growing old vigorous shoots for transplantation in America and the British colonies.

Prosperity, the most exciting and exhilarating of all known, but it is only cost the old country it cordially and [illegible]

THE NEW TOWN OF ST. CLAIR.

We clip the following from the Great Falls, Montana Tribune of Sept. 25th, sent to Wallis Gray by our old friend James Erskine:

The site of the new town of St. Clair has been successfully platted by County Surveyor Kern. In common with all Cascade county, the Chestnut valley is advancing with rapid strides in mineral wealth and general prosperity. One of the latest indications of this advancement is the location of a townsite of St. Clair. This new town which has been laid out for Mr. Erskine, by county surveyor Kern, stands on the bank of the Missouri, opposite the town of Cascade. It has good facilities for trade with the Chestnut valley, which is one of the most productive and picturesque in Northern Montana. The town will be connected with the westside of the Missouri by a bridge which will give it ready access to the Montana Central railroad, whose depot is within a few hundred yards of the townsite. Mr. Erskine, who is an enterprising merchant and has an extensive store which is doing a large business, intends to establish in the new town a model creamery, which will use the separator process. The townsite of St. Clair has been platted upon a modern scale and with a view to the location there of a flourishing town. Already many lots have been secured in this town, which starts out with good auspices and bids fair to become one of the most prosperous places in the country. It has a good basis for trade in the growing importance of the Chestnut valley, which makes large wool and stock shipments, and buys largely farm and household supplies.

The new town has five broad avenues, namely, Columbus, Michigan, Broadway, Franklin and Chestnut. Streets run at right angles to the avenues. Among those which have received names are, Clair, Tecumseh and Frederick. For the information of the people it may be added that St. Clair is about 20 miles from Great Falls and is convenient to the Montana Central which connects Great Falls with Helena Butte.

JUGGLING WITH TAXATION.

The following vigorous leader is taken from the Philadelphia Times, which has been a Republican high tariff paper heretofore.

The one great demand of the people of the whole country is for relief from needless and oppressive taxes on the necessaries of business and of life. All parties have solemnly promised it from year to year, but high war taxes have continued long after the necessity for war revenues has ceased, and to-day we present the singular spectacle of $130,000,000 of surplus money in the treasury, exacted from the industries of the nation, withdrawn from legitimate channels of business and trade, and serving no purpose beyond oppression to tax-payers and whetting the appetite of the jobber and profligate.

Since the war we have reduced the taxes of the opulent and allowed war taxes to remain upon the common necessaries of life. We have relieved corporations of millions of taxes on gross receipts, we have remitted the taxes of employers in manufacturing pursuits, we have repealed the taxes on sales, we have effaced the taxes on incomes paid only by the rich, we have made legacies and successions free; we have abolished stamp taxes, we have repealed some $270,000,000 of war taxes paid by the rich, but the high war taxes remain on the blankets, the clothing, the tinware, the salt, the lumber and other common necessaries in daily use by the workingmen of the land. And these oppressive taxes have logically fed combines and trusts whose greed multiplies taxes upon these much needed articles of life and of business, until our taxes have become so exorbitant that the wage earner pays 47 cents out of his 61 earned for taxes on very many of the articles most needed for himself and his family.

The Democrats, with two Republicans supporting them, passed a relief bill in the House. It enlarged the free list to common necessaries, reduced taxes which specially oppress labor and maintained a higher standard of protection to our manufacturing industries than was ever given in any tariff when the country was free from the exactions of war. The Republicans first denounced the effort to revise our taxes and reduce our surplus revenues as needless agitation of the tariff and as unsettling the business of the country; but before the contest closed in the House, the Republicans saw that their protested promises for tariff and tax revision must either be redeemed or some pretence exhibited of doing so. The complaint of tariff agitation was abandoned, as the Republicans accepted the necessity of proposing a tariff of their own, and now, after months of careful study of the political necessities of the day, we have the Republican tariff revision bill.

And what does the Senate tariff bill propose in relief of either the pressing necessaries of business or the common necessaries of life? Beyond a severe reduction in sugar that would simply destroy our sugar industries without cheapening sugar to consumers, what is cheapened of importance that effects the great mass of the people? Wool is increased, instead of making it free, as it has been during half the history of our government, and, of necessity, the present tax of 40 cents per lb. on woolens is increased. We say of necessity, for our Woolen manufacturers are so crippled by war taxes on raw materials that they are languishing and their help is ill paid even with a tax of 60 per cent. on consumers. Woolens are a universal necessity of life from the cradle to the grave; our consumption amounts to nearly $500,000,000 annually and instead of cheapening this necessity we go backward even beyond actual war taxes and increase burdens on the whole people only to protect English mills and labor.

The refusal of our Senate to give our manufacturers and laborers the benefit of the free list of raw materials, is simply a monstrous assault on American capital, American labor and American consumers. It is in defiance of the earnest teachings of Republican Presidents Grant, Arthur and Garfield, and is at war with every principle of justice to labor and justice to consumers. It is turning backward the hands of progress into the darkness of Chinese walled theories, and is a fearful confession that there can be no relief to either capital or labor without an imperious demand from the people in the coming election. It is an appalling declaration that the highest war taxes on the necessaries of business and of life shall continue indefinitely, and that high taxes and low wages shall be the only hope of American workingmen. It is the policy of madness; the policy of oppressing the many for the benefit of the few, and it is the most flagrant assault that was ever made upon capital, labor and consumers since the formation of the republic. It is mean partisan jugglery with taxation; nothing more; nothing less.

OUR BRAVE LEADER.

Hon. W. R. Burt is making the most remarkable canvass that has been made in Michigan since the close of the war. His assault on the high taxes, extravagance and incompetency of Republican management astonish and delight the people, but scatter consternation and dismay among the g. o. p. As a business man he takes a business view of things, and would bring business methods to bear on public affairs. The people see he will be the right man in the right place, when they put him in the Gubernatorial chair, which they are bound to do.

HERESY IN HIGH PLACES.

The Detroit Evening Journal says: "A short crop of wheat raises the price of that product but is a diminution instead of an increase of the wealth of the country. The farmer may get more per bushel but at the end of the season he may not have any more cash in his pocket than if he had sold twice as much at lower figures; while the rise in the price of bread is a direct loss to the wage-earner in other occupations. However, the abundance or scantiness of the crops is beyond the control of all human effort or the laws of political economy. If the farmers feel richer on account of higher prices it is so much gain from a condition depending on rain and sun and which can not be helped or hindered by human devices."

What free trade heresy is this in a protection newspaper! We supposed our tariff war tariff was the sole cause of good prices for the farmers' crops.

FORESIGHT OF FATHER ABRAHAM.

In his last message to Congress President Lincoln said: In view of recent events, the growth of the corporations, trusts, and monopolies during the past ten years, how prophetic this language is:

"As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless."

SCORING JAMES G. BLAINE.

The New York Evening Post, in commenting upon Mr. Blaine's statement made in Detroit that $60,000,000 had been loaned by the government to the national banks without charging them any interest, and that the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury is liable to be impeached for the act, says:

Both of this statements are as false as anything that Mr. Blaine ever said in his life. The first statement is that the depositing of the surplus in national banks is substantially without the shadow of law, when section 5153 of the Revised Statutes declares that "all national banking associations designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be depositories of public money, except receipts from customs, under some regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary." The second statement is that if any Republican Secretary had done what Secretary Fairchild has done he would have been impeached by the Democrats if they had been in power. The fact is that Secretary Sherman deposited more money in national banks at one time than Secretary Fairchild has deposited, and did it for the same reason, viz., to avoid or prevent a panic in the money market which would otherwise have been brought about by the operations of the treasury.

There is no denying the fact that Dr. Bull's Red Clover Tonic is the most successful blood purifier ever put on the market. Its wonderful cures in all stomach kidney and liver troubles has brought out many imitations. It restores debilitated nerve tissues, restoring the force lost by sickness, mental work or excessive use of liquor, opium and tobacco. Dr. Geo. Ferguson, will supply the genuine at 50 cents a bottle.

Learned Professors Say.

The most serious diseases of the heart, says Prof. Da Costa, may occur without any symptoms. Prof Trousseau, of Paris, states that death from heart disease is usually caused by congestion of the lungs, liver, stomach or kidneys, from imperfect circulation of the blood. Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart is the latest and most reliable remedy for this little understood but grave disease. It has cured thousands of cases. Don't fail to try it. Ask for testimonals. Sold at Baker and Hall's Drug Store.

THE WASHINGTON WIRE.

TELEGRAPHIC TICKS OF CONGRESSIONAL DOINGS.

Bills and Resolutions Introduced into Both Branches of the National Legislature and the Action Taken by the Law-Makers Thereon—A Summary of the Week's Work in Congress.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 10.—The conference report on the general deficiency bill was agreed to in the senate yesterday, and Edmunds, after expressing regret that the provision for Mrs. Waite, widow of the late chief justice, had been left out, introduced a bill to pay that lady the remainder of the justice's salary for one year and asked immediate consideration; Berry objected. Hoar's bill to fix the meeting of the presidential electors, etc., was passed. The resolution for an investigation into the assassination of Joseph Hoffman in Washington county, Texas, was adopted. Blair made a long speech on the execution of Louis Riel.

E. B. Taylor of Ohio gave notice in the house that he would object to all bills except those for appropriations and pensions, in the absence of a quorum, and he forthwith objected to two that were proposed. A bill appropriating $50,000 to enforce the Chinese exclusion act was passed. The conference report on the general deficiency bill came up, and after some partisan debate a vote was taken resulting—ayes, 34; nays, 3—no quorum, whereupon Dougherty of Florida, to pay Taylor for his objections early in the day, raised the point of no quorum and the report failed to pass. The senate electoral college bill was passed and the house adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 11.—In the senate yesterday Hale presented the report of the select committee on the operation of the civil service law under the present administration. Briefly stated, the report declares that the law has been practically nullified; that the condition of affairs is as diametrically opposite to the president's promises as could be imagined, and that about all the evils which civil service reformers complained of exist now. It is suggested, also, that the president's contribution of $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund was a direct violation of the law. The statements are fortified with the evidence taken by the committee. The minority report is yet to be presented. A resolution for an inquiry into the complaint that the Union Pacific bridge at Omaha is an obstruction to navigation was passed; also a resolution to inquire whether American cattle can not be transported through Canada without the present quarantine delay. The bill to pay the widow of the late Chief Justice Waite $8,745 was passed; also the house bill for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota. Lodge then spoke on the tariff, defending the Mills bill, and the senate, after a short executive session, adjourned.

A point of order was raised in the house against the passage of the bill to perfect the Cook county court bill, and a motion to reconsider entered, which led to "no quorum" filibustering. The speaker said the bill could be acted upon when reported as enrolled for the speaker's signature. The point against the bill was "no quorum." The report on the deficiency bill was agreed to, action on several bills was delayed by the "no quorum" objection, and the house adjourned to Friday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 12.—The senate yesterday passed the bill appropriating $50,000 to enforce the Chinese exclusion act. Mitchell made a speech in favor of one-cent newspaper postage. The tariff debate was then proceeded with, Cullom and Platt speaking in favor of the mills bill. At 4 o'clock p. m. the senate adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 13.—The senate yesterday passed the bill appropriating $50,000 to enforce the Chinese exclusion act. Mitchell made a speech in favor of one-cent newspaper postage. The tariff debate was then proceeded with, Cullom and Platt speaking in favor of the mills bill. At 4 o'clock p. m. the senate adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 14.—The senate yesterday passed some routine business, and then continued the discussion on the tariff bill. Allison, in answer to a question by Dolph, stated that in the tallow soap stock or stearin was put on the free list, but that was one of the mistakes of the bill, and the committee would move to amend by restoring it to the dutiable list. Call then spoke in opposition to the bill. Hawley spoke briefly for the bill, stating that it was the best first draft of a tariff bill he had ever seen, but congress could not dispose of it this session, and he wanted to go home, and was going. Reagan said he would not agree to vote either for the house or senate bill on every clause. Conference reports on the Fourth of July claims bill and the bill to retire Gen. Pleasanton were agreed to. A resolution to investigate the arrears of work in the land office was adopted. The senate held a short executive session, and then adjourned till Monday.

The house attendance was very small, and half a dozen leaves of absence were granted, one of them being to Cheadle of Indiana, who expressed a "desire to visit my constituents." The conference report on the Fourth of July claims bill was agreed to, as was the report of the Stablecker investigating committee. Joint resolutions were passed to print the first and second annual reports of the labor commissioner. A long discussion took place on the senate Nicaragua canal bill, but no action was taken. The bill to retire Gen. Pleasanton was agreed, too, and then, after some "no quorum" filibustering, the house adjourned to Monday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 16.—The president's vetoes of the bills giving pensions to Mrs. Sarah Woolside and Mary R. Richards were read in the senate yesterday and Blair made a speech against the vetoes, bringing up the case of Mary Ann Dougherty, whose bill was vetoed because the president said she had no claim. Blair in the course of his remarks declared the president was an "infamous liar," while Cockrell characterized Harrison's statements as "trash and bosh." The first Tuesday in December was set apart for consideration of the Pacific railway funding bill. The joint resolution authorizing the executive departments to make exhibits at the Paris exposition of 1889 was passed. Brown presented the petition of the W. C. T. U. of Georgia, asking the repeal of the internal revenue taxes. Blair spoke in favor of adjournment, and Allison said congress could not adjourn until the general deficiency appropriations had been passed. Vest delivered a speech in favor of free sugar, and the senate adjourned.

In the house E. B. Taylor objected to all business except the resolution relative to a conference to compare arrears, the best means of suppressing yellow fever. He said no more legislation should be enacted at this session. Wheeler offered a resolution pledging the Democrats to continued efforts for tariff reduction, declaring the senate tariff bill constructed in the interests of monopoly, and that it should be discussed in the house. A bill was introduced giving a county of 160 acres of land to veterans of the war of the rebellion or their heirs, also granting pensions to veterans who are disabled or have reached 60 years of age. Oates offered a resolution for adjournment sine die, Oct. 17. Dougherty withdrew his point of no quorum against the passage of the electoral college bill, and the passage thereof was effected. The house then adjourned.

It is rumored that negotiations for an alliance of the Northern Pacific and Wisconsin Central are on foot.

TWO VIEWS ON TRUSTS.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND—"Public office is a public trust."

JAMES G. BLAINE—"They (the trusts) are private affairs with which neither President Cleveland nor any private citizen has any particular right to interfere."

Greatly Excited.

Not a few of the citizens of Tecumseh have recently become greatly excited over the astounding facts, that several of their friends who had been pronounced by their physicians as incurable and beyond all hope—suffering with dreaded monster Consumption—have been completely cured by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, the only remedy that does positively cure all throat and lung diseases, Coughs, Colds, asthma and Bronchitis.

REDUCING THE REPUBLICAN SURPLUS.

Pickpockets follow the Blaine caravan like they do any other Jumbo show. The following dispatch appeared in the Evening Journal:

Wabash, Ind., Oct. 12.—About 50 pickpockets worked the crowd at the Blaine demonstration at Goshen and secured about $15,000. The excursion train on the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan road yesterday was crowded. Trouble was begun in the first coach by a rough grossly insulting a lady. Her escort attempted to defend her, and was seized by the toughs, who jammed his head through the car window and relieved him of his valuables. Then a raid was made on the passengers, one of whom, it is reported, was shot by the desperadoes. Several shots were fired, ladies screamed and fainted and many rushed from one coach to another in their efforts to keep out of the reach of the robbers.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs L. S. Pickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

GRAPE CURE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. Speer, of New Jersey, whose wines have such a well merited and extended reputation all over this country and Europe, for their age and excellent properties in cases of sickness, are so famous for their curative properties, is about to build a large Hotel or Grape Cure Establishment on one corner of his vineyard. The House will accommodate five or six hundred guests who are to have the privilege of roaming among the vines, in the morning to pluck the ripe grapes and Breakfast on them while the cool dew is yet on.

LOG CABINS do not appeal strongly to modern notions of social comfort, as they have had their day. But Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and Log Cabin Hops are as popular to-day as when the rugged health of the hardy pioneers was maintained by them.

Rusco & Swift's Uncle Tom's Cabin will appear at the opera house Monday evening, Oct. 29th.

WEAK will power, from physical causes, drains a man's life in every direction. Every one will strengthen his will powers as well as his bodily powers, by using Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla. It is guaranteed the best. Sold by your druggist for $1. Contains 320 doses. Take no other for it.

Be discreet in all things and so render it unnecessary to be mysterious about any. There is nothing mysterious about the action of Warner's Log Cabin Hops and Buchu Remedy. It puts the stomach in healthy action. Good digestion and health naturally follow. Be discreet and use this, the best remedy.

The symptoms are drowsiness, loss of appetite, headache, lack of energy, pain in the back, costiveness or diarrhœa, sallowness of skin, furred tongue, generally attended with melancholy and

GENERAL DEBILITY.

To cure these diseases means to restore the action of the liver and other organs, and to kill the poison in the blood. A remedy containing Mandrake, Culvers Root, Burdock and Cascara Sagrada, acting especially on the liver, stomach, kidneys and sweat glands, is the proper one.

CONSTIPATION.

THE process of digestion and assimilation at times demands the healthy action of the liver, pancreas and bowels which supply the proper fluids, in order to stimulate them to proper action.

combines all the best medicines, as Mandrake, Culvers Root and Cascara Sagrada, with tonics to restore all secretions and supply the needed action. After taking a few bottles nature completes the cure.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.

For over twenty years I have been a great sufferer from the effects of a diseased stomach, and for three years past have been unable to do any business, hardly able to move about. Two years ago my case was pronounced by the best medical skill incurable. I visited different water cures and tried different climates, but to no good. Last June I began using Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and at once began to feel better. I have used thirteen bottles, and am a well man. Prescott Bakers,

THE advantage of using an article that is pure and always uniform, is, you are certain of having the same satisfactory results. Eight prominent Professors of Chemistry, of national reputation, have analyzed the IVORY SOAP, and the variation in each is so trifling that the quality of the "IVORY" may be considered reliably uniform. Each pronounced it to be remarkably pure, and a superior laundry soap.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

TERRIBLE RAILWAY DISASTER.

Eighty People Killed and Over 150 Badly Injured.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Oct. 11.—A most appalling accident took place between 8 and 9 o'clock yesterday evening on the Lehigh Valley railroad at a point midway between White Haven and Penn Haven Junction, near the little place known as Mud Run. The loss of life was awful. The estimates at 11 o'clock place the number of dead at eighty and the injured at over 150.

The annual convention and parade of the Father Mathew society of this diocese of Scranton was held at Hazelton yesterday, and enormous crowds went down here from

SCENE OF THE WRECK.

Luzerne and Lackawanna counties. Seven long trains with the cars crowded to the doors passed White Haven yesterday morning, filled with people from these two counties.

LATER.—The last reports place the number of killed at eighty, and the number of injured at over 150. There is not a worse spot on the line for such an accident. The track there runs close beside the Lehigh river, a steep embankment sixty to seventy-five feet high, running down from the tracks to the river. The tracks of the Central railroad of New Jersey run along the opposite side of the river, and the passengers on the train that reached here at 10 o'clock had a distinct view of the awful scene by the light of glimmering lamps and torches.

They say that the cars were smashed to pieces and buried from the tracks, and that several had rolled part of the way down the steep embankment and others were standing right across the track. The spot is a desolate one. The nearest town is White Haven, four miles away, while in the other direction the nearest place is Mauch Chunk. The railroad officials at this point absolutely decline to say anything whatever about the accident.

represented by Rear Admiral Rodgers. There were also present Commodore Schley, Commodore Terry, Naval Constructor Nixon, Naval Constructor Hichborn, Rear Admiral Franklin and many other naval officers. The Petrel started from the ways at 2:00 p. m., being christened by Miss Virginia Schley, daughter of Commodore Schley, breaking a bottle of champagne over her bow. The Petrel glided into the Patapsco gracefully amid tooting of whistles of many tugs and excursion boats.

FALL OF A GRAND STAND.

Terrible Calamity at a Big Celebration at Quincy, Ill.

QUINCY, Ill., Oct. 12.—The second day of the Quincy fall celebration ended in an awful calamity Wednesday night in which 150 people were more or less seriously injured. The grand stand at 20th and Hampshire streets, from which an immense crowd was viewing the display of fireworks, collapsed without warning, and the 4,500 or 5,000 people occupying the seats were precipitated to the ground and buried under the debris. A scene of the most intense excitement ensued. Groans and shrieks rent the air, mingled with shouts and cries of the unhurt. The town is wildly excited and the newspaper offices are besieged by relatives anxious to see the list of injured.

Up to noon Thursday but one death was reported. Hon. A. W. Wells, member of the state legislature, is in a precarious condition, having suffered a dislocation of the thigh, fracture of ribs and internal injuries. The 17-year old daughter of H. A. Vandeboom, has a badly crushed ankle, and amputation will likely be necessary. During the stampede many articles of jewelry and wearing apparel were lost. The most of it has been recovered by the owners. Tell, whose life is in distress on account of his accident.

Disastrous Fire at Winona, Minn.

WINONA, Minn., Oct. 15.—The postoffice block, occupied by A. McNeil & Co., wholesale stationers, the Western Union Telegraph, the Masonic Temple, and others was burned Saturday night. The McNeil property adjoining, a three-story brick building, was also destroyed. The losses will aggregate $75,000. The contents of the postoffice were removed. Help was telegraphed for to LaCrosse, but countermanded.

Street Car Accident at Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 13.—A train on the Walnut Hill cable and Park hill horse car collided Friday morning. All the cars were wrecked and fifteen persons hurt. Mrs. J. C. Conden was seriously injured and one passenger dumped in the mud. The loss is heavy.

LOG CABIN LOGIC.

Brawn and Brain!

The powerful engine, with its wonderful impelling power, coupled to the long train freighted with the richest fabrics of the interior rooms of the Centennial, will not stay the progress of this mighty force, when once under full steam along life's highway.

The American with brawn and brain does not seek for success for fickle or no reason, does not, cannot stay or elevation by descent, he reaches out and plucks the stars.

But with brawn or brain impaired, a man is sadly handicapped in the race for success, which is the marked characteristic of the present age.

The physical system is a most intricate piece of machinery. It ought to be kept well regulated, so that it will work harmoniously in all its parts, then it is capable of an immense amount of work.

It is said that a watch, if expected to keep perfect time, must be wound daily. It will not keep good time unless it "runs regular." More men break down because they don't "run regular" than for any other reason.

It is claimed by physicians that few men are killed by hard work. It is to the irregularities of modern social life that the high death rate is due. Men burn their candle at both ends, then wonder why it burns out so quickly.

The main thing in keeping the human machine in good working order is to keep the regulator all right. "The blood is the life," and sound health is assured so long as the blood flows throught the veins a limpid stream of purity.

Regulate the regulator with Warner's Log Cabin sarsaparilla, the old fashioned blood purifier, prepared after the best formula in use by our ancestors in good old Log Cabin days, and with the vigor of brawn and brain which must insue, in your life's lexicon you will find no such word as fail.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

The Late Sir Henry Bishop Composed the Music of This Most Popular Song.

Some time ago, when the late Mr. Corcoran's touching tribute to John Howard Payne's memory was a topic of fresh interest to Americans, I was drawn into a short controversy relating to the authorship of the music of "Home, Sweet Home," whose popular words have immortalized the name of Payne as their author.

It was maintained by me at that time that the composer of the music was the late Sir Henry Bishop, but quite a formidable array of writers appeared in opposition to my assertion, and not having anything stronger than my memory to fortify my statement, I was quite overwhelmed by the "cloud of witnesses" for the opposition who maintained that the melody was a "Sicilian air adapted by Bishop."

Perhaps you will not deny me the justice, even at this late day, of publicly asserting that I have now, right here in London, come into possession of the report of a legal verdict in favor of the claims of Mr. Bishop as the true composer of "Home, Sweet Home," and thus vindicating my own humble character for accuracy of statement where musical history is concerned.—Jerome Hopkins in New York Sun.

DR. GALE ON DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS.

Dr. Gale observes in this treatise on disease that the abuse of wine in France is supposed to have abated the prevalence of the gravel.

In some parts of this country where Speer's Port Grape Wine is principally used, not only the gout, but the gravel is scarcely known. Dr. LaPota relates an extraordinary instance of the effects of Speers Port Wine on gout the cure of Dr. Daveran, who was attacked with it at the age of twelve, five, and had it severely till he was upwards of fifty, with chalk stones in the joints of his hands and feet but for four years preceding the time when his case had been given to Dr. LaPota to lay before the public had by advised Speer's Port Grape Wine, and had no return of the gout afterwards.—London Post.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayseed in Town.

A very green couple from Virginia attended Albaugh's last night, and after they had taken their seats the young man began to look over the programme.

"Thunderation, Mary," he said with a sudden start, "we can't see this show out."

"Why, John, what's the matter?" asked the girl in disappointed tones.

"Why, look at here, this bill says three weeks elapses between the first and second acts, and by gravy I've got to git home by to-morrow night to tend putting the corn in the hill field."

An usher explained the matter later and they remained.—Washington Critic.

A CAMPAIGN OFFER.

A serial story of exceptional power and interest has just been commenced in the Detroit Weekly Free Press. The story is entitled "Behind Closed Doors," and was written by Anna Katherine Green, the author of the famous "Leavenworth Case" of which Chief Justice Waite said: "It is the greatest work ever written by a woman." "Behind Closed Doors" is certainly one of the most remarkable and mystifying stories ever placed before the public. It will outrank "The Leavenworth Case," and take its place as the best novel that its talented author has yet produced.

In order that all may enjoy this new story, we have made club terms by which we can send the Weekly Free Press and the HERALD, both papers, three months for fifty cents. Send in your half dollars at once.

In connection with the fact that Dr Jones' Red Clover Tonic has had the largest sale, it has been the most successful remedy ever before the public for all blood troubles and diseases of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Fifty cents buys a bottle of Dr. Geo. Ferguson. Mrs. Emma Brown, Lima, Ohio, says four bottles of Jones' Red Clover Tonic has cured me of sick headache that I have been subject to for over nine years.

LOG CABINS are the recommended as model habitations for modern people. But Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and Warner's "Tippecanoe" are the simple but effective compounds which enabled the rugged pioneer to maintain health, and can be safely recommended to all.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CONTEST.

The second congress district of Michigan, comprising the counties of Monroe, Washtenaw, Lenawee and Hillsdale, is one of the wealthiest and best agricultural districts in the Union. In the fertility of its soil, in its annual productions, in the intelligence and enterprise of its inhabitants, it is excelled by none. If a list were to be made of the six finest agricultural districts in the United States the Second Michigan would be found therein, and well towards the head. It is a district which any man of political talent and ambition might well feel proud to represent.

Three candidates solicit the suffrages of its electors in the present campaign. They are all unexceptionable men, personally considered. The race however, as all admit, lies between Capt. Allen the present incumbent and Willard Stearns. One of these two men, if he lives, will represent the district in the fifty-first congress. Which one shall it be? As Capt. Allen asserted in his Britton speech, it makes but little difference to the people of this district who is chosen to represent them, so far as the candidates are personally concerned. Both have their friends. In intellectual attainments, in moral probity and worth, in physical health and strength, they are both well equipped to represent us in the Halls of Congress. Candor compels us to say that personally they are well matched; that each finds in the other an honorable and manly foe.

But it makes a mighty difference to the taxpayers of this district, in a political sense, which man shall represent them; whether we shall send to Washington a representative of low taxes and fair play towards the farming classes, or a representative of high taxes and protective tariff plunder. Let it be understood that we have no criticism or censure to offer against Capt. Allen as a citizen. In his personal and professional relations with others he is in every sense a gentleman. But we conceive that his political course in Congress has been detrimental to the taxpayers of this district and that he has grossly misrepresented his own constituents. He has voted in direct opposition to the best interests of the farmers and business men in these four counties. He has voted against relieving us from the burdens of excessive war taxation. He has voted to continue our enslavement to the millionaire and monopolist. He has violated the official and business obligations he owed to an agricultural constituency at the dictation of a party caucus and at the crack of the party lash. With the kindest feelings towards Capt. Allen personally we beg leave to submit a few facts and figures to substantiate this charge.

By the census returns of 1884 as given in the Michigan Manual the population of this district in that year was as follows:

Hillsdale county	31,686
Lenawee	49,784
Monroe	33,353
Washtenaw	41,694
Total	156,317

The increase since then has probably been five per cent, but for convenience in computation we will call it about three per cent. and place the present population in round numbers at 160,000. This is a safe estimate.

What proportion of the enormous surplus now glutting the U. S. treasury is properly chargeable to this Congressional district? What do our people pay annually towards gathering this needless surplus? What is their share of the plunder taken from them each year by our present system of tariff taxation?

At the beginning of the present fiscal year the surplus was 113 millions of dollars in round numbers. It has been increasing since, notwithstanding heavy purchases of bonds, at the rate of ten millions a month. It is entirely within bounds to say that this accumulation will average that sum monthly during the current fiscal year, which would be 120 millions annually. Our total population at present is at least 60 millions. The present accumulation of surplus therefore is $2 00 per capita for the United States. This per capita tax levied upon the inhabitants of this district gives the snug little sum of $320,000, which is the sum Capt. Allen's constituents are compelled to pay yearly for the sole benefit of a few millionaires and monopolists. Rather an expensive luxury. Let us compare this sum with the local taxation in the four counties comprising the district.

State	$57,752.80
County	36,210.00
Town and City	59,256.62
Total	$153,219.42

The city taxes in Adrian alone were $42,239.90. This aggregate would amount to $3 00 per capita in round numbers for the entire county, but considerably less than that per centage for the county, exclusive of Adrian city.

The following table gives the State and county taxes in all four counties as apportioned in October, 1887.

	STATE.	COUNTY.
Hillsdale	43,815.40	29,499.78
Lenawee	57,752.80	36,210.00
Monroe	30,939.00	19,199 83
Washtenaw	61,387 98	24,957.00
Total	194,395.18	109,666.56
State		194,395.18
Total		$304 061 74

Thus we see the amount of plunder taken out of this district annually by this useless taxation under the guise of "protection to home industry," exceeds by several thousand dollars the entire levy for both state and county purposes in the four counties. And in examining this table it should be borne in mind that the county levy in Lenawee is excessive as compared with the other counties, and that the state levy has been increasing at a fearful rate for the past four years, until it has surpassed all bounds of economy and decency. These figures also show that the county levy, when compared with the state levy, is several thousand dollars less in the Democratic counties of Monroe and Washtenaw than in the Republican counties of Lenawee and Hillsdale. The peculiar faculty of Republican financiers for saddling the people with needless and excessive taxation is displayed with the utmost impartiality in both national and local affairs.

When we come to examine the tariff in detail and estimate the extra cost to our people of nearly all the manufactured fabrics they buy, by reason thereof, the subject broadens so rapidly as to extend beyond the limits of a newspaper article. But we can briefly examine the effect of the wool schedule upon our inhabitants, for this is a question in which they are especially interested. Let us see how much they save by the ten cent duty on raw wool and how much they lose by the enhanced cost of their woolen goods.

In his Britton speech Capt. Allen gave the number of sheep in the four counties in the year 1884 as follows. He did not state his authority but we accept his figures as correct. The odd hundreds are omitted in the table.

Monroe	38,000
Hillsdale	129,000
Lenawee	146,000
Washtenaw	186,000
Total	499,000

Or in round numbers just half a million. The wool clip of 1884 in in pounds was 2,762,000 or an average of about 5½ pounds per head.

In the Michigan crop report for July last, on page 9, we find the number of sheep in the four counties as reported by the Supervisors in May '88 and also a careful estimate of the wool clip for '88. The wool clip is estimated, that is true, but by comparison with previous years it is made to approximate very closely to the actual amount. Here are the figures:

	Sheep on hand in May '88.	Wool Clip in pounds.
Hillsdale	81,878	486,355
Lenawee	86,476	539,610
Monroe	25,458	134,164
Washtenaw	114,634	750,856
Totals	308,446	1,910,985

The average weight of the fleece is a fraction over 6 2-10 pounds, against 5¾ pounds in 1884. The number of sheep, however, has decreased in a wonderful ratio, having dropped 191,000, or nearly 40 per cent. in four years. Now we will stick a pin right here, and ask our genial friend, Capt. Allen, two or three questions.

1st. What is the cause of this marvelous decrease in the sheep-growing industry of this district as shown by these figures, when we have been living under the same blessed tariff during the whole four years?

2d. Why should he have introduced, in his Britton debate, a batch of musty statistics, grown gray with age, when by expending three minutes time and a two cent postage stamp, he could have written a letter to Lansing and obtained the correct figures for this year of grace 1888?

3d. If our present exorbitant top-notch protective tariff has wiped out nearly forty per cent of the sheep in this district in the brief space of four years, would it not be a good plan to try the experiment for a while of a reasonable revenue tariff?

By reducing the above tables to a per capita basis, that is, by dividing the sheep on hand and the wool clip for '88 by the number of inhabitants, we find that we have 1.93 sheep and 11.94 pounds of wool to each inhabitant. We will make the figures liberal and call them an even 2 sheep and an even 12 pounds of wool per capita. Admitting, for the purposes of comparison, that the wool duty of ten cents a pound is worth exactly that much to the producer, and that placing wool on the free list would actually entail a loss of ten cents a pound to the wool grower, the loss thus occasioned would amount to $1.20 to each inhabitant, or $192,000 for the whole district.

Now then, how much are the people of the district mulcted for the extra cost of woolen goods which the present war tariff compels them to pay?

From the census of 1880 are gathered the following statistics of the consumption of woolen goods and the increase of cost occasioned by the tariff. The cost of woolen goods to the people of the United States in 1880 was $517,561,229. Here are the items of increase as given by Hon. Wm. M. Springer in his great wool speech:

Forty per cent increase on home made goods, (1880).	$109,873,165
Duties paid on imported fabrics	21,152,070
Twenty-five per cent. on these two items as expenses, commission, etc.	32,006,308
Total tariff increase	$160,031,543

In 1880 we had fifty million inhabitants. The total cost of woolen goods in round numbers was in that year $10 to each person, or for a family of five, $50. The enhanced cost by reason of tariff duties would be $3.20 per capita, or $15 to a family of five persons.

The increased consumption of woolen goods since 1880 has just about kept pace with the increase of population, hence the above figures would be a fair and safe estimate for the present year. With these figures before us let us strike a balance sheet.

DEBIT.

Cost to the people of this district to maintain the present annual surplus in the U. S. treasury, per capita	$2,00
Cost of the enhanced price of woolen goods consumed	$3.20
Total, per capita	$5.20

CREDIT.

Amount saved on the wool duty of ten cents per pound	$1.20
Net debit, per capita	$4 00

The aggregate figures for the four counties are as follows:

DEBIT.

Cost to the whole district to maintain the annual surplus	$320,000
Cost of the increased price of woolen goods	512,000
Total	$832,900

CREDIT.

Amount saved on the wool duty at 10 cents per pound,	$192,000
Net debit for the district,	$640,000

The people of the district pay out $320,000 yearly to keep up our blessed surplus and $512,000 more as a tax on woolen goods to save $192,000 yearly in a wool duty and the operation entails a net loss upon the district of $4,00 per capita or $640,000 annually. If a business man were to conduct his private affairs on such a basis, he would be considered a fit subject for a lunatic asylum.

And yet, this is but a small part of the whole story. Our people are not only robbed upon their woolen goods, but upon nearly all other manufactured fabrics which they have to buy. They are taxed on their furniture; on their fuel; on the lumber and building material which they need to shelter their heads from the winter's storm on their tools and farming utensils on nearly all articles of household and farm use. How much does the war tariff cost this district in all these directions? On this point an exact computation is impossible. The best authorities however estimate the cost to the whole country in the enhanced prices made by the tariff at from 500 to 1000 millions annually. If only the extra cost on home made products is considered, deducting the benefits received by favored classes, it would reach the minimum figure or about $10 per capita. If we include both the tariff duties received by the government, the extra cost to the consumer on home made fabrics, and also the indirect evil results of the present pernicious system, it would reach the maximum figure, or $20.00 per capita annually.

Again, the supposed saving of ten cents a pound on wool, by the wool duty, is wholly illusory. Unimpeachable figures, which have heretofore appeared in these columns, show that the wool grower receives a higher price for his wool under a low tariff than under a high one. The humbug that a high tariff makes high prices for wool has been long since exploded. Our farmers right here in Lenawee county got 5 cents a pound more for their wool during the "free trade" tariff of '46 to 60 than under the top-notch tariff of '67 to '88. Many of our woolen manufacturers and woolen experts maintain that the present duty on raw wool makes it impossible for our own manufacturers to compete with those of England even to hold our own market; that 47½ per cent of all our woolen goods are now made in foreign looms. Relieve our manufacturer of this tax on raw material, and they could then hold the home market which would so stimulate the demand for domestic wool as to raise the price to fully the amount lost by the repeal of the wool duty. Many of our best judges claim that wool would bring a better price than it does now.

Hence, when we get down to rock bottom figures we find that our present blessed tariff taxes the people of this district $2.00 per capita to maintain a surplus that can be used only to fatten the lobby and encourage corruption; it taxes them $3.20 per capita in the extra cost of their woolen goods; it taxes them from $10 to $20 per capita in the total direct and indirect plunder occasioned by the tariff, and what does it give them in return? A pretended bonus of $1 20 per capita in a wool duty, which in fact is only a delusion and a snare.

In his record in Congress upon the tariff question Capt. Allen has betrayed the interests of his constituents. He has lost the opportunity of a life time. Had he possessed the moral courage to boldly sustain the Mills bill, as Congressman Fitch did, who was elected as a Republican, his canvass this fall would have been a walk over. No republican convention in this agricultural district would have dared to refuse him a renomination, and no democrat would have dared to run against him. The voters of this district believe in tax reduction and tariff revision. Capt. Allen has grossly misrepresented us on this great issue. He must now step aside and permit another man to represent us in the fifty-first Congress.

Shull's corner however about three o'clock and began making preparations to raise their 150 foot pole, which was advertised to go up last week. Considerable delay was experienced in getting the tackles in place, and when nearly half way up the pulling out of a stake put them back again. It was nearly 5:30 o'clock when the pole was put in position and the speaking was dispensed with. Three rousing cheers were given for Harrison and Morton. The pole is a beauty and the tallest in the village.

POLITICS WARMING UP.

THE THREE PARTIES REPRESENTED IN TECUMSEH ALL TAKE A HAND AT THE OAR.

Plenty of Prohibition, with Protection and Free Trade in Good, Liberal Doses—Poltical Events of the Past Week.

The campaign may be said to be at its height here in Tecumseh at present. Our people were somewhat slow in getting started, but they have got well warmed up now on all sides, and meetings are plenty. Since the last issue of the HERALD the Prohibitionists, Democrats and Republicans have all had good rallies, of which we give as full a synopsis as our space will permit.

Prohibition Rally.

Last Saturday proved a damp day for a dry cause. Nevertheless, as the Prohibs can stand considerable moisture of the proper kind, there assembled a good-sized audience in the evening to hear Rev. J. D. Graham, of Flint. The meeting was opened by singing by the Tecumseh Glee Club, which gave several well-enjoyed selections during the evening, of a kind calculated to inspire enthusiasm for the growing third party. After prayer by Rev. Burnett, Mr. C. M. Fellows, who was unexpectedly present, made a short plea for the Prohibition cause, containing many good arguments. The nominee for this district wished to deliver a message from a revered citizen, who, if he lives will cast his vote, probably the last, for prohibition and right. This was cited as a worthy example for young as well, to cast their first vote for their principles and conscientious belief. He was tired of hearing those who believed in temperance, but were willing to abandon their principles for fear of losing their vote. Some, he said, were opposed to prohibition because it would increase taxes. But, remember that the license is paid by the poor man. Aye, even the poor mother and wife, while the bulk of direct taxes were paid by the rich, who own the property.—Considering the two old parties, the speaker allowed them a large portion of temperance men, but they did not represent the party, neither could the temperance tail wag the Republican or Democratic dog. Hence the impossibility of relying on them for any conscientious work in reform. While thus showing the position of both, he especially scored the g. o. p. for the dishonerly and futility of its work, and the hypocrisy of its pretensions for temperance legislation.

After the remarks of Mr. Fellows, M. P. Brown introduced the first colored orator to speak upon political subjects in Tecumseh, the Rev. D. A. Graham, of Flint, who at once gained the appreciation and sympathy of his audience. Following is a synopsis of the gentleman's address:

"I fail to see the difference between the old parties. In attending their meetings I can judge only when they abuse or uphold Mr. Cleveland, or by the ribbons worn on the hats of the audience. One says, we must keep up the tariff; it is Randall. A prominent newspaper clamors for the blessings of free trade; it is the Chicago Tribune. I thought the Republicans would not reduce the tariff, but the Democrats holler 'free whisky' and then the Republicans favor a reduction of five million more than the so-called free traders. What does the tariff amount to in reality? Is it a question for the people to understand and vote upon? It is certainly but a bugaboo for political agitation, which was to be settled four, eight, twelve years ago. It is, they profess, the vital issue of to-day, but knowing that neither bill can pass, they are certain of a tariff scare to hoodwink the people four years to come.

"The Republicans would protect sheep. He would begin at the house, not on the back side of the farm, and remain there. After eloquently depicting the horrors of licensed intemperance, he says they charge the new party with a bad way of getting at it. But there has never been a national reform without a new party. No old party was ever reformed on a moral question. The Democratic doctrine never advocated the suppression of intemperance by legislation. But the Republicans affect the role of sincere temperance legislators, and plead not guilty when the liquor traffic has developed under their control, and in the partnership Uncle Sam gets 90 cents per gallon of the profits. The great leaders of the Republican party are gone, and it is worse than folly to uphold a party for what it has done when live issues are at stake which it will not support. They cordially sympathize with us, but do nothing. They lean toward temperance, but do not step over. That most patriotic Republican, Mr. Fisk, stepped over when he could remain no longer. So have thousands, and still thousands more when they have the courage to defy the stickler who cries, You've thrown away your vote. Is a vote lost that is cast for principle? Were the meager abolition votes, and labor, and prayers of '48 and '52 lost? But one thing is now certain, my worthy Republican friends of temperance lost their vote and principle too four years ago, and indications point to a repetition of the loss this fall.

The speaker entertained no faith in the pretensions of the Republican party toward his brethren, and claimed they did not deserve a colored vote since their faithless operations in West Virginia in '76. The colored people would not have peace so long as they were politically arrayed against the whites. But the intelligent men of both parties were fast uniting for temperance in the south, and then and not till then would they have mutual interest and protection in a common cause. The Supreme court decision affirming the legality of importing and selling liquor in original packages, as the Scott decision affected free soil territory, set at naught local laws in the dry states. Thus is all local effort wiped out and national legislation remains as the only and imperative remedy. He wished to know how intemperance and a license policy compares with religious principles. He believed in taking religion into politics if it would not become soiled thereby. Religion should regulate the politics of religious people. In concluding the speech, which throughout was clean and manly, he urged all to declare for principle now, and not wait till success attends the efforts of the faithful and say, We've been here all the while.

Protection to American Industries.

Although a local paper announced last Thursday that Mrs. Hazlett had cancelled her date here, the Opera House was crowded Tuesday night to hear her speak on the Republican side of the political question, and it is safe to say that the tariff question was explained in a way that surprised many who thought they knew all about it. Mrs. Hazlett said she would speak more for the ladies' benefit, as they were not supposed to be as well posted as their husbands. Her speech was a plain statement of facts that all could understand, and was delivered in a convincing manner. It was probably the most interesting speech delivered this campaign and the audience gave their close attention for nearly three hours.

The stage was handsomely decorated with flags and bunting, and portraits of Harrison and Morton occupied places in front, resting on easels. The Dover Glee Club was present and delighted the audience with several campaign songs. Hon. Geo. Howell introduced the speaker of the evening in a few well-chosen remarks.

Mrs. Hazlett began with: Ladies and gentlemen—While listening to what I have to say to you this evening please be kind enough to bear in mind that I cannot be influenced by any partisan feeling. I cannot be a Republican nor can I be a Democrat in the full sense of the term, because neither party will recognize my right to vote. Although we have not the right to vote, we have the right of free speech, because it is utterly impossible to stop them.

If we go back a hundred years we shall find that England possessed a very small part of her present greatness. The great and beautiful city of Manchester was a very small town. England was trying to draw trade to Europe about then. She had unparalelled room for commerce. She had cool, calculating men who had the courage to take advantage of and grasp the opportunities for gain. Industries sprang into being and she grew unparelelled in the history of the world. But she had not enough food for her millions. She sent to her American colonies and said, Send us grain and we will send you our manufactures. You shall not work in iron and steel; you may dig your gold and silver and send it over to us; you shall not make a cup or saucer. Her colonies revolted and there was war, but out of it all came the stars and stripes. Our fathers then said, We will make our own clothes and do our own manufacturing. England loaded her ships with goods and sent them over to America and offered them at lower prices than we could make them. These little American mills had to compete with cheaper labor and machinery, and they were compelled to close. Our fathers called a convention and framed a constitution; an election was held; Congress was chosen and the very first business done was to formulate a tariff for the protection of American industries. That is where it began. Money began to flow into the treasury from these tariff duties, and in a little while there was money to pay pensions to the soldiers, pay expenses of the legislature, to pay other expenses of the government. But there were men who said, We are paying too much for our goods and is more than we paid England. We can buy goods cheaper of England; let us buy where we can buy the cheapest. Don't that sound natural, Democrats? They got into power and off came the tariff. The news came to England and they said, Let us pour our goods into the American market. It is worth our while to lose money on our importations so we can stifle those little manufactories. Money was raised in England for the purpose of buying goods and sending them to America, in order to bankrupt those manufactories here. Our mills were closed, those people were thrown out of employment, and families began to suffer. Things went from bad to worse until 1816; then they got a protection tariff again. People got tired of free trade. In 1833 the free traders went at it again and the same experience was gone over again. Tariff for revenue only was then resorted to. We will have just enough duties on the goods to meet the running expenses of the government. Things went on until 1842 and then President Tyler sent a message to congress, saying the nation was bankrupt. They had no money to pay expenses; people were idle. A tariff law was made for five years and then they got revenue only again. It was prosperous for two or three years and then set in a retrogression. Why were we prosperous? There was the great Crimean war in Europe. There was a famine in Ireland. We had the wheat to send them. Farmers got $3 a bushel for their wheat. But in a little while the war was over and we began to be thrown back on the real merits of the revenue only system. Between 1849 and 1857 we mined eleven million dollars in gold, and notwithstanding we had the money to help us out, the banks broke, the people were idle, and no money to meet the demands of the government. When the Republicans came into power they made the tariff laws high. We had a great war on our hands. We had to have lots of money. The Republicans put an internal revenue tax on almost everything we ate and drank or wore. After the war they began to take off the internal revenue from the necessaries of life.

You have a village president and council and they are expected to look after the interests of the village, to protect them from outside affairs. If a man from Detroit or Chicago comes here with a bankrupt stock of goods to sell at a low price, the president compels him to pay a license to protect your merchants in regular trade here, who helps pay the taxes, builds the sidewalks and improves the streets. It is the same principle applied to state and national government. She also spoke of the sectional features of the Mills bill, as it protects the southern states and puts the northern industries on the free list, with the exception of Don M. Dickinson's wood pulp industry.

A Democratic Rally.

The opera house was crowded with a fine audience last evening to listen to Captain Manley, of Ann Arbor, the one-armed Union veteran. The city band gave some of their best selections on the street, and opened the meeting with two fine pieces inside before the speaking began. As the Captain did not wish to consume the entire evening, S. C. Stacy was drafted into the service and made the opening speech. Wm. Hayden, president of our campaign club, presided, and besides the speakers Judge Stacy, Capt. Fred Wood and Editor Field occupied chairs on the platform.—Scove Stacy's speech was not a party harangue, but rather a business talk on the tariff issue, and his remarks were confined wholly to that question. Capt. Manley followed in a pleasing address, which made a very favorable impression.

The subject of the tariff having been spoken of at length, Captain Manley stated that he would leave that subject alone, as Mr. Blaine had done in his tour through Michigan. We give an outline of his speech, which treated vigorously several other vital questions.

Knowing that a living interest in the questions of to-day, and not a curiosity in the speaker, has brought my hearers here to-night, I can frankly say I welcome you as citizens and fellow voters who will impartially consider with me a few points of interest in our campaign at home. I have listened to the esteemed lady who preceded me in this place, and do not come attempting to answer or compete with one of her recognized ability as an orator. But what I do say will certainly not agree with her presentation of the case.

Introducing figures to show the increased taxation under Republican administration over a term of Democratic rule, he says:

The people have cause to look into the causes of this enormous taxation. The people elected a governor who, although honest and in licious, from party affiliations and lack of self reliance, allowed large expenses to be inaugurated and maintained, wholly unnecessary to the economical workings of a state government. An appropriation of $8,000 was allowed for the purpose of running the farm, 400 acres alone, at the agricultural college. Do the farmers of Lenawee pay thus for tilling their farms? If so, they had better all hire out to some one else. On the other hand a Democratic measure to secure rights and freedom of choice to voters at our polls, was defeated as likely to win for its promoters the favor of the people. The tax bill providing for collection of certain taxes by state, instead of county treasurer, must not pass, as it would eliminate from the treasurer's office a force of 33 clerks. This, gentlemen, means a reduction in expenses of $33,000, and a consequent loss of political power to Republican office holders. The bill for a uniform system of school books recommended by Gov. Luce, was not supported by him when the book selling interest was brought to bear upon the majority of our state legislature. Five hundred dollars increase was asked for a private secretary. It was granted.

The rail road bill reducing cost of passenger travel to two cents per mile within the state was also defeated. Two weeks before the time for vote, we had a majority of two votes for the measure. Again the friends of corporations were called upon, and again they responded with the usual result. But the vaunted friends of the soldier, who put down the rebellion, having already run up expenses to the highest notch, dare not pay the bounties of the volunteers from the state of Michigan. This would cost $7,000,000. Nearly a million every two years in excess of economical expenses but not a cent for the promised bounties of our noble volunteers. Blaine, in denouncing the vetoes of Cleveland, expressed a desire to read them to his audience. It would hardly become his position however. The captain then read several vetoes which showed the careful examination given them by the President. All these pensions were asked for deserters, bushwhackers or soldiers whose services were short and unimportant. All these vetoed pension bills carelessly passed in the house and senate by the quantity, examined as required by law and found illegal and unjust to every heroic and worthy soldier in the land. Ask Mr. Allen if he voted for a pension to these deserters and bushwhackers. Ask Mr. Stearns if he would vote for them; and if he would, I, as one who loves his comrades, would use my influence against him. The speaker lightly touched on the malignant attack upon Mr. Stearns and showed how he was supported by his own comrades when upholding their rights in the face of official censure.

Capt. E. P. Allen was in town last Friday afternoon, having come up from Adrian on the noon train and he remained at the Lilley House most of the afternoon before driving to Macon to speak in the evening. We had a friendly chat with him during his stay. He is appearing well and in good spirits. He will not return to Washington as he is paired with a Confederate Brigadier, and he thinks Congress will adjourn this week. Our effort to draw him out on politics elicited nothing new.

Preparations are being made for the largest lumber cut the coming winter in the history of the upper peninsula, but that south of the straits will fall somewhat below the average of recent years.

The Y. M. C. A. people, of Grand Rapids, have invested $23,000 in a lot and are now skirmishing about trying to raise $75,000 with which to build a suitable edifice thereon.

A Lansing man struck a five-foot vein of coal while sinking a well. But it's not the first black article discovered in the capital city.

C. A. Dickinson, a Junia farmer, raised six pumpkins which weighed 659 pounds and took the cake at the local fair. The plumpest one of the lot weighed 183 pounds. Pumpkin pie ought to be plentiful in that latitude this year.

The fruit train on the Chicago & West Michigan railway recently hauled twenty-four car loads of peaches to Chicago one day last week, averaging over twenty-five tons of fruit to each car. This is said to be the heaviest single shipment of peaches ever sent by rail from this state to the Garden City.

Alexander Johns, a youthful gentleman of color, persuaded Ida Seybolt, a pretty white girl of Lansing, 13 years old, that she loved him, and the pair eloped for the wild west to grow up with the country, but they were overhauled at Chicago and the girl returned to her pa and her ma, while the youth of color went to the calabooso for violating the age of consent law.

A typographical error in the premium list of the Coopersville fair made that document offer a cash prize for the "best painting on satan," and the competition in that class was very spirited, notwithstanding that the managers meant to have the work done in "satin."

There's a 720 acre tract of valuable hardwood timber, near Perrington, that has hitherto escaped the woodman's ax because the title has been in dispute for the past 50 years. This has finally been settled, and D. T. Smith, a Romeo resident, has purchased it and the primitive forest will be laid low the coming winter.

A Grand Rapids woman left her husband because he mildly and meekly intimated that it would be a good idea for her to clean up the house. SHORTAGE IN THE WHEAT CROP.

The Average Yield in Wheat Growing States as Compared with 1887.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—The following crop summary will appear in this week's edition of The Farmers' Review: The shortage in the wheat crop of 1888 is due not only to decreased acreage, but also to damage from various causes, such as frost, winter killing, rust, chinch-bugs, and drought. The following estimates of the crop in the principal wheat growing states are based on the acreage planted in those states as estimated by the department of agriculture and the average yield as reported by The Farmers' Review correspondent:

Kentucky—14,400,252 bushels, against 11,115,000 bushels in 1887.

Ohio—28,277,760 bushels, against 35,805,000.

Indiana—37,148,625 bushels, against 37,828,000.

Iowa—28,202,281 bushels, against 26,837,000.

Missouri—23,124,130 bushels, against 27,744,000.

Kansas—33,540,952 bushels, against 7,602,000.

Nebraska—21,280,920 bushels, against 16,575,000.

Michigan—21,967,800 bushels, against 21,672,000.

Wisconsin—12,555,257 bushels, against 15,039,000.

Minnesota—21,237,317 bushels, against 36,200,000.

Allowing for the decrease in the area planted in the southern and eastern states reported by the department of agriculture and for an acreage in the western states and territories not mentioned above, and assuming that the yield per acre will be equal to that of last year, we estimate that the crop in the said states and territories to be 136,158,020 bushels, which added to the total in the above eleven states and Dakota would make a total of 418,998,372 bushels this year, against 456,520,000 bushels last year.

KNIGHTS FOR REVENUE ONLY.

What Mr. Powderly Says of Thomas Barry and Ex-Secretary Litchman.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—A special dispatch from Pittsburg to The Times says: "There was published in this city to-day (Sunday) a sensational letter from Mr. Powderly, in which he states that Thomas Barry was three months ago bounced from the Knights of Labor executive board as the result of charges preferred by the district assembly of Toronto, Can. Mr. Powderly gives no idea of the charges in his letter, which is addressed to Mr. Harry Bengough, a prominent Knight of Labor of this city. Powderly says that the presentation of the charges, which were mailed direct to him, were delayed, because he pitied Barry, who was then ill. Powderly says he will make no public reply to Barry's speeches and letters, but at the Indianapolis general assembly he will make a complete statement of the work of the order. He accuses both Barry and Litchman of having been in the order for revenue only, and when they were disappointed in that line they were eager to retire."

Best of All

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.
